The entire Board of Trustees listened with the Notre Dame alumnae. Edmund, J. M. Haggard Sr., Senior member of Notre Dame's Advisory Council, has joined the College of Business Administration. Both of his sons are Notre Dame alumni. Edmund, a class of '38, is now an active member of the Business Administration Advisory Council. Joseph Jr. earned his degree in 1940.

Joseph M. Haggard, Jr. (president) said that the renovation was proceeding in orderly steps. "There will be occasional stops and starts of course, but it seems to be going well on the whole." He particularly praised Fr. Robert Griffin's O.C.D. as a "planned and open discussion" and the quick action of the student delegation. Mr. Harold S. Foley, another trustee, observed that the request "extremely useful" and not at all narrow or directed solely to the students point of view." Several other board members concurred in these reactions.

Trustee Paul C. Helms pointed at the student affairs committee of the trustees. He was both pleased with the way the meeting went. "The Board could not have been more receptive and we are looking forward to working with the student affairs committee for another few weeks." He expressed the hope that some definite plans on undergraduate priorities could be worked out within a few months.

John D. Rockefeller IV, the newest member of the student affairs committee suggested that the problems of going co-ed might especially need thorough investigation. "This seems to be the lit of what both students and administrators were saying," he commented. "There is a natural tendency to quit pushing for all the needed changes after a few years and there are some areas, such as the lack of housing and the lack of women role-models—women in contact with undergrads—that should be pushed.

Rockefeller pointed out that all those who spoke agreed that there are too few women in the faculty and administration. He also pointed to the problem of residency as one that needed particular examination. The Board discussed the LaFortune renovation and on the advice of Fr. Jerome Wilson, University vice-president for business affairs, and on the recommendations forwarded from student administration, the Board agreed to consider changes in the architectural plans in light of these recommendations. A sum of $250,000 was appropriated by the trustees for the renovation last May.

Trustee John Schneider, a member of the student affairs committee, said that the renovation was proceeding in orderly steps. "There will be occasional stops and starts of course, but it seems to be going well on the whole." He particularly praised Fr. Robert Griffin's O.C.D. as a "planned and open discussion" and the quick action of the student delegation. Mr. Harold S. Foley, another trustee, observed that the request "extremely useful" and not at all narrow or directed solely to the students point of view." SBF McLaughlin stated that he was very pleased with the way the meeting went. He expressed the hope that some definite plans on undergraduate priorities could be worked out within a few months.

CHICAGO (UPI) - Police Sunday seized more than 20 pounds of pure Mexican heroin, worth an estimated $20 million, in what authorities called the largest narcotics seizure in Chicago history. Four persons were arrested and police confiscated the heroin hidden in a false gas tank after a three-mile car chase on the West Side that capped a month-long investigation.

MANILA (UPI) - At least 14 persons have died of cholera apparently from eating salted raw shrimp, the official Philippine News Agency reported Sunday. It said the fatalities were among 65 cholera cases reported in towns of Cagayan province, 240 miles north of Manila, where an inoculation drive is now in progress. It identified the cholera strain as the El Tor, common in the tropics.

GUATEMALA CITY (UPI) - Three volcanoes spewed ash and sand across vast areas of Guatemala's Pacific coast Sunday in eruptions officials feared would heavily damage crops. The volcanoes, "Tupejo," "Pacaya," and "Santiaguito," began erupting Friday. Authorities estimated damage to sugar, cane and sesame seed crops would be high.

TOKYO (UPI) - Organizers wound up preparations Sunday for nationwide mass rallies to mark International Anti-war Day Monday and demonstrate against suspected presence of American nuclear weapons in Japan. They predicted more than 2 million persons will participate.

MOSCOW (UPI) - Natural gas tapped from the vast reserves of remote Siberia will start flowing to Moscow kitchens, factories and power plants for the first time in the next three weeks, the Soviet press said Sunday.

LISBON (UPI) - The Portuguese Communist Party Sunday held its first national congress in 46 years. Party officials said the one-day meeting attended by about 5,000 persons was called to bring the party's constitution and statutes in line with recent political developments.

NICOSIA (UPI) - The government said Turkish warplanes violated a Cyprus air space Sunday for the fifth consecutive day. The government, which considers Turkish overflights a violation of the cease-fire and breach of conditions laid down in legislation of the U.S.-mediated peace plan signed by President Ford Friday, said in a statement Turkish jets violated Cyprus air space four times Sunday.

Rafferty begins biology lectures

Dr. Michael A. Rafferty, professor of molecular biology at the California Institute of Technology, will deliver three Peter C. Reilly lectures this week. The lectures, today, Wednesday, and Friday will each begin at 7:30 p.m. in Room 123 of the Nieuwland Science Building.

Rafferty's research interests are in the mechanism of enzyme action, biological membranes, neurochemistry and developmental biology. His research accomplishments have been recognized by such awards as the Alfred P. Sloan Fellowship in 1969 and a National Institute of Health post-doctoral fellowship in 1970.

Rafferty has developed new techniques for detecting the exchange of information which modulates enzyme activity. His Reilly lectures will concern communication between intracellular macromolecules and between different parts of the cell membrane.

The lectures are free and open to the public.

Ford sees GOP chances bright

By MIKE FEINSINGER
WASHINGTON (UPI) - President Ford says crisis-crossing America and talking to Republican professionals has convinced him that Republican chances in next month's elections are less dismal than the polls indicate.

Ford also:
- Defends his decision to demobilize much of his time in the past few and the next few weeks.
- Refutes claims for Republicans, "I think I spend enough time in the Oval Office doing what I do," says. "I have enough time to decide what's right and what's wrong."
- Shrugs off the suggestion that his own influence and political prestige will wane if the GOP takes a beating Nov. 5 despite all his efforts. "If I don't do anything and we lose," he muses, "Republicans in the House would say, 'He didn't even try.'"
- A relaxed, shirt-sleeved President, drink in his hand, cruising home at 25,000 feet and 600 miles an hour aboard Air Force One, made his comments to reporters Saturday night.

The group encountered very few roadblocks during their day-long vigil, according to its leader Rich "Suds" O'Connor. "The management has been very cooperational," he confided. "They've provided us with a portable toilet. They've even turned on the heat lamps (overhead in the canopy) for us."

Ground rules for the interview prohibited publication of his remarks until Sunday night.

The chief executive was en route home from a 16-hour day of campaigning for Republicans against uphill odds - in South and North Carolina and in Kentucky.

At Louisville, where Republicans paid $15 to eat cold chicken and roast beef sandwich-wiches from cardboard boxes, Ford acknowledged the possibility existed that Republicans could lose another 40 or 50 seats in the House and seven or eight Senate seats.

In that event, the President said, big spenders will be in control of government.

Ford told reporters his conversations with reliable Republican leaders whom he considers resists convince him Republican chances are better than portrayed. He said he got the feeling from his overnight trip to the farm states of the Midwest that things are "not as pessimistic as some of the polls would lead you to believe."

"What sort of net gains or losses does he anticipate?"

"I'll tell you better in a week," he said.

"Everywhere Ford has campaigned he has argued that a big Democratic victory could lead to a "legislative dictatorship."

"The people who want a veto-proof Congress in effect want a legislative dictatorship," he said.

Throughout, Ford went around the state and enunciated his new plan for a "limited government," a return to "smaller government." He cited as his examples of the last administration the "dual role of the secretaries of state," the "trimmed down" National Security Council, the "NSC Instruction No. 1."

"I want one branch of the federal government to dominate and control all other branches of the federal government and that is completely opposite of the fundamental concept of our Constitution," said the President.

"Speaking off the cuff," he added, "Really, I look in your eyes and I plead with your hearts, and I beg with your minds, that you must organize your efforts ... because the stakes are very, very high."

Students hold vigil for Elton tix

Since 9 p.m. last Thursday a group of six students from rover Hall endured rain, wind and freezing temperatures as they waited for tickets to the Elton John concert to go on sale. When the box office opened this morning, they had sat in front of Gate 10 of the ACC for 108 hours.

The group encountered very few problems during the four-day vigil, according to its leader Rich "Suds" O'Connor. "The management has been very cooperational," he confided. "They've provided us with a portable toilet. They've even turned on the heat lamps (overhead in the canopy) for us."

Why would anyone wait so long for tickets? "Well, there are six of us here, holding the first six places in line. We each buy to buy the limit of 12 tickets per person," O'Connor said. "They had us get front row seats, and by selling the remaining tickets to less-hardy individual, we realize a small profit," he explained.

Thus far, Elton John is now selling for $7.50 at the ACC and Student Union. By November 3, the date of the concert, they are expected to cost anywhere from 25 to 50 dollars.

"If the concert goes well," explained O'Connor. "Besides, the alcohol took a secondary place to the social function of the gathering." During the party the November issue of "Sixteen Magazine" was passed around to see who could get the best score on the "Marie Osmond Love Quiz." Norm Roof, the winner, scored 11 out of 12. "I didn't realize that Marie's favorite color was pace," he explained.

Find out why.

Fire eruips in Walsh

A fire broke out in room 331 of Walsh Hall Sunday morning at approximately 6:60 a.m. According to first floor resident assistant Libby Ford, the fire began when a group of students who were preparing to move out were left the mattress of a day bed in the room. The name of the resident is not known at this writing. “The room needs to be repainted, and the rug is worthless,” she stated.

A citizen of the Dining Hall. Although they did not have their ID cards, the checkers were very cooperative, explained one Walsh resident. A career in law, without law school.

What can you do with only a bachelor's degree? Now there is a way to bridge the gap between an undergraduate education and a clerking, responsible career. The Lawyer's Training Institute is able to do work traditionally done by lawyer’s.

Three months of intensive training can give you the skills—the courses are taught by lawyers. You can choose one of the six courses offered—choose the city in which you want to work.

Since 1970, The Institute for Paralegal Training has placed more than 700 graduates in law firms, banks, and corporations in over 60 cities. If you are a student of high academic standing and are interested in a career as a Lawyer's Assistant, we'd like to meet you.

Contact your placement office for an interview with our representative.

Blue Mantle top priority

SMC assembly discusses money matters

by Mary Jancia

St. Mary's Editor

Business Manager of St. Mary's yearbook, the Blue Mantle and SMC Student Government Treasurer Ellie Quinn requested that Student Assembly absorb approximately $1300 of a $2800 deficit left by last year's yearbook staff, at an Assembly meeting last night.

According to Quinn, the Blue Mantle staff deferred payment of a $1279 bill until printing errors in last year's yearbook were corrected, and then apparently failed to pay it.

The College Business Office has agreed to pay $1,506.74 of the bill, with the stipulation that Student Government absorb the remaining $272.26.

Reasons for the Business Office's selection of this figure are unclear, continued Quinn.

Assembly representatives contended that to absorb the deficit could "establish a precedent in absorbing all future debts of the Blue Mantle. Consequently, the request was tabled, pending a more complete investigation of the matter.

The Assembly also raised the yearly salary of the Academic Community Life Commissioner from $300 to $400. With this increase, Lehman's salary equals those of the other three Board of Governance Commissioners: Joanne Garrett, legislative commissioner; Chris Albright, student affairs commissioner, and Martie Rabben, hall commissioner.

This vote amends a proposal of the last meeting which increased Lehman's salary from $300 to $275.

Previous arguments against a salary hike centered on the role of the Academic Affairs Commissioner in the Board of Governance. Lehman serves in an advisory capacity to the Board, contrary to the other commissioners who have voting rights.

According to Lehman, discussion of her raise had become "a question of power and authority vs. responsibility," and in her position, she said she has "as much responsibility, if not more so, than the other members of the Board."

Lehman's duties presently include student representative to the Presidential Search Committee and to the Rank and Tenure Committee, as well as membership in the Academic Affairs Council, Curriculum Council, the Academic Standards Subcommittee of the Board of Regents, and Student Assembly.

The Assembly passed the amendment by a 4-0 margin, with one abstention.

To develop intramural volleyball, ping-pong, swimming, basketball, and flag football, Assembly members unanimously voted to allocate $600 to Mary Hoover's, Athletic Commissioner, with the stipulation that an account of all expenses be made to Student Assembly.

Hoover's, working under the direction of Ms. Steve Wernig, Assistant to the vice president of student affairs, stated that the funds will pay for equipment, advertising, official's stipend, and office supplies.

Regarding the number of tickets to ND basketball games St. Mary's will receive, Legislative Commissioner Joanne Garrett announced that SMC has been "guaranteed" 400 student tickets. Additionally, student tickets not bought by Notre Dame students, will be put up for sale for SMC students, at the same price in previous years.

Job recruiters scheduled at SMC

by Sue McGuire

Staff Reporter

Employment recruiters from 49 companies are scheduled to come to St. Mary's this year. The number is twice that of last year's, and plans are underway to contact additional companies interested in hiring liberal arts graduates.

The SMC Career Development Center is helping students to prepare for their interviews through career planning workshops and interview prep sessions.

"Traditionally colleges have sponsored recruiters without taking on the responsibility of educating the students," explained Karen O'Neil, head of SMC Career Development Center.

The interview prep sessions are held at the Center from 6:30 to 8 p.m. every Thursday night before recruiters are scheduled to come.

The Career Development Center is also spending much time with recruiters to find out what openings and opportunities exist and what kind of persons companies are looking for. A newsletter is sent to these recruiters to notify them what jobs and direction Saint Mary's is taking and to make the recruiters more aware of the preparation students are getting.

Because of the many activities at the Career Development Center O'Neil advises students who wish to see her individually to make an appointment.

Notre Dame Law school to publish a new journal

Volume One of the Notre Dame Journal of Legislation, a new publication of the University's Law School students, is receiving international distribution this week with copies being mailed to all law libraries, U.S. and state supreme courts, and city and county libraries. A successor to New Dimensions in Legislation, the Notre Dame publication joins Harvard and University libraries in a three-periodical type in the nation.

A major article in the first publication is "A Handbook of Research and Drafting of Legislation" by Dennis J. Owens, a third-year student from Kansas City and editor of the Journal. Financed by a grant from the Law Student Division of the American Bar Association, the volume is 48 pages long.

The handbook serves as a guide to the processes involved in researching and drafting a legislative bill. Owens, a graduate of Rockhurst College, will serve as clerk for Missouri Supreme Court Justice Robert E. Soley after graduation.

A Kansas City congressman featured in the current issue of Time magazine, Richard Bolling, is the author of another article, "Does Congress Have a Future?" Bolling is chairman of the Select Committee on Congressional Reform and previews his report and proposals on the restructuring of the Congressional committee system.

Other major articles include "High Crimes and Misdemeanors," the definitions of an impeachable offense, and two proposals for obscenity laws edited by Joseph O'Meara, dean emeritus of the Notre Dame Law School. Also featured are three articles on the Equal Rights Amendment dealing with family laws, education and community property laws.

First American bishop’s journal to be released

A three-volume edition of the "The Pious of John Carroll, Founder of the American Catholic Hierarchy" will be published by the University of Notre Dame Press in 1975 as a contribution to the celebration of the bicentennial of the American Revolution.

Prepared in comprehensive form for the first time, the major work will contain many previously unpublished historical insights gathered from the large manuscript deposits in the Archdiocesan archives in Baltimore and more than 400 publications in Europe and America.

The work of Thomas W. Breen Hanley, resident Jesuit scholar and lecturer of Baltimore's Loyola College, is presently completing preparation of the material.

Consecrated as the first Catholic bishop of the United States in 1790, John Carroll served on the Commission of the Continental Congress to Canada, in company with Benjamin Franklin and other statesmen.

The book gives in-depth portraits of the men who came to power in the Senate, Robert McNamara, McGeorge Bundy, William P. Bundy, Dean Rusk, George Ball, William Westmoreland, Maxwell Taylor, and Presidents Kennedy and Johnson themselves. Halberstam recounts in detail the history of the conflict, the reaction of the American people, biographies of the men involved, and the governmental processes involved such as the workings of the Pentagon and the State Department.

It’s a book of the Vietnam War and the men involved is best summarized when he says: "What was most striking about this period as events closed in on the principal was how little exploration there was of the consequences of their route... and what it might do to the country."

To the Observer:

An unfortunate consequence of the recent controversy concerning the appointment of the chairman of the Department of Sociology and Anthropology has been the omission of any reference to the professional qualifications of Leo Despres to serve in this capacity. Despres was one of dozens of serious outside candidates for the job of chairman. He was one of only three outside finalists when the department felt were sufficiently qualified to warrant invitations for personal interview. He has had significant training in both disciplines of the department, having obtained a masters degree in sociology, and a Ph.D. in anthropology. Of all four candidates, Despres has had the most administrative experience. He chaired the Non-Western Studies Program at Ohio Wesleyan University. He chaired the Anthropology Department at Case-Western Reserve for four years. While at Case-Western, he served on numerous advisory councils and as president of the university's AAUP chapter. Additionally, he has been a consultant to numerous local and governmental agencies. Despres is a well-recognized scholar of national reputation, with an extensive and impressive publication record.

By any objective and professional criteria, Leo Despres would have been a qualified candidate for this position.

Dear Observer:

I am reluctant to discuss matters involving academic appointments and confidential assessments of individuals in what is basically a student newspaper. However, in recent remarks in the pages of the Observer about the appointment of a new Chairman in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology, bravely matters the professional credentials and reputation of a person. One can only hope it has been done in ignorance.

Whatever one may think of the procedures of appointment and the communication as lack thereof between department and Dean, it is a wholly different matter to impugn the professional qualities of the persons considered for or appointed to the position. The credentials of the man finally appointed are solid: academic training, publications, field work, administrative experience. They need no apology from this office. Moreover they were assessed by competent outsiders inside the University as well as in it. The decision was not made arbitrarily, nor was it made on religious grounds: to imply or say so is sheer calumny.

Sincerely yours,

Rah-Rah

Dear Observer:

What has happened to the Notre Dame spirit? Is it due to the fact that we had six players suspended? Is it that we have won so many games that we are, as one alumni put it, "rich" in wins, and therefore don't get psyched for a game as do teams who aren't? Is it the feed (or feeding) frenzy (for a win? ex: Purdue)? Or is it that we have a second team against a team which was supposed to have been a push over, everyone comes out sort of "down"? Is it that nobody wants to be considered a rah-rahs?

When the team is doing poorly, that is when they need the cheers the most. Yet it seems that is when we the students are perfectly quiet. So be a rah-rah, big deal. The administration is now aware of the fans who show up and the fans who show up toward the students too, as was made clear to me this past weekend.

Dear Observer:

Dear Observer: you're both real fast. We feel that we are being whine-whashed. This incident must not be brushed over. Why is it that paint which was free for five weeks suddenly costs $6.00 per gallon? Where does this money go? Perhaps there is a satisfactory explanation, but we cannot help but think that there may be some massive paint coverup involved. Regardless, we think that we deserve our moneyback. This is of primer concern. Let's get this business out from under the drop cloths, and get some reasonable explanations.

Sincerely,
Alumni Hall

Dear Observer:

To the Editor:

Despres is well-known to us all, in sociology, and a Ph.D. in one or both disciplines of our department. He is qualified to warrant serious outside candidates for the appointment of the chairman of the Department of Sociology and Anthropology. Of all four candidates, Despres has served as consultant to anthropology. Of all four candidates, Despres has served as consultant to anthropology. Of all four candidates, Despres has served as consultant to anthropology. Of all four candidates, Despres has served as consultant to anthropology.

To the Observer:

We feel that it is our duty to inform the students of one more facet of this school's never-ending multi-faceted policies of ripping the student off. On Monday, October 7, two of us went to the maintenance building to acquire some free paint, to paint one of our rooms. We were aware of the fact that for the first time, this year the university was providing students with free paint to paint their rooms, or so we thought. We could imagine how dismayed we were upon arriving at the paint shop when we were confronted by two very amused gentlemen who informed us that the free paint had ended on the preceding Friday, and that now, the same paint which was free for the first few weeks of school, would cost $6.00 per gallon.

The administrators of the maintenance shop continued to say that notices of this action were posted in each dorm. Well, our room, painted a bright shade of repugnant orange by the previous tenants (which is not a university-approved color), was in dire need of a few coats of paint. Since we had no choice but to pay the $6.00 per gallon, a total of $12.00. Unfortunately, since the paint was so unjust act we were told that we were lucky to be able to get the paint so cheap, downtown it would cost much more.

Returning to our dorm, canvassing the bulletin boards, we found a notice of reclamation of the paint given away. There were signs asking that all extra paint be returned, but there were no notices that the paint give-away would end.

We feel that we are being white-washed. This incident must not be brushed over. Why is it that paint which was free for five weeks suddenly costs $6.00 per gallon? Where does this money go? Perhaps there is a satisfactory explanation, but we cannot help but think that there may be some massive paint coverup involved. Regardless, we think that we deserve our moneyback. Dean of College of Arts and Letters

Good evening ladies and gentlemen. Tonight, with the aid of slides, I would like to bring to your attention the most remarkable find in the entire history of entomology. You may have heard rumors of a strange and unique butterfly in the darkest depths of the Amazon jungle. We, I have come to tell you, my dear friends and colleagues, that they have actually traveled to that far off rain forest and photographed this mysterious and wondrous creature for myself. This unique species of butterfly that I have endowed with the prestigious title of "Singualus wingulis Sua Americana". Yes friends, you heard correctly! Singualus wingulis Sua Americana is in layman's terms, a butterfly with a single wing! Please...please stay in your seats! Thank you.

I know that many of you are skeptical and that the majority feel that this a bold faced lie, but the Singualus wingulis does exist, and I have virtually proven it until they make, thus earning some measure of protection from those who would seek to prey on them, but once they join in we see no perpetration they travel far and wide in a cleverly planned dispersal maneuver. Their love has given them wings.

With that I give you the reason for their single wings...they are virgins until they mate, thus earning some measure of protection from those who would seek to prey on them, but once they join in we see no perpetration they travel far and wide in a cleverly planned dispersal maneuver. Their love has given them wings.
Now showing in the Main Gallery of Moreau Hall at St. Mary's College is a visiting exhibit of photographs by Eugene Atget from the International Museum of Photography at George Eastman House in Rochester, New York. Atget's subject is Paris—the Paris of the first decade of this century, and he has captured haunting images of the city in the forty-one original prints now on display.

Atget was a Pariot, and caught the mood of his city in strangely-lighted photographs of streets, shops, maisons, parks, and the Seine. His straightforward approach to a mundane subject, using only light for special effects and mood made him very influential upon several important later photographers, including Cariot-Bresson, Berniek Abbot, and Lee Friedlander.

It seems Atget's favorite time of day to work was the crack of dawn, both to achieve his lighting effects and to avoid the subjects of the photos. There are almost no important figures in any of the photos, and none at all in many of them. The figures that do appear are incidental to the scene, and not the subjects of the photos.

Paris—Au Port Saulet-Cabaret, Rue des Fossées St. Jacques presents the most important of any figure—a fat woman who actually seems to be included because she has become as much a part of the store front as the Port Salut sign or the fruit stalls. The size of this figure is better demonstrated in his photo of a pink shop in the Rue de Petit Thavars. Amid the clutter what catches the eye are two mannekins dressed in evening clothes. It is, as an old second glance that the seamstress working on the doorstep becomes noticeable. And so it goes in many studies of shop windows filled with dummies modeling everything from corpses to children's hats and dolls. Dolls are also prominent in Porte de Meureuil, Fortifications Extra Murus. They are hung all over the outside of the shack as a form of decoration and fortification.

By far the most of Atget's photos are of the streets of Paris themselves, not of the Parisians who lived in them. His most effective use of the early-morning sunlight and deep shadows occurs in some of these pictures. The Cabaret du Gd Cercle Rue St. Martin 128 is especially remarkable. The light shines brightly on the facade of the building, but inside the open door the cabinet work and still. It seems almost as if the door was forgotten rather than that someone had come and opened it. It probably only a few minutes before. Maison de Benjamin Franklin, Rue de Montmorency employees much the same effect. The street before the house of the one-time American ambassador is in deep shadow, but the windows and white facade gleam in the sunlight.

The depth and clarity of Atget's photographs is remarkable considering the primitive equipment he used. Coup de la Veraille (7), Atget no. 360 uses light, shadow, and perspective to accentuate the high walls of a narrow alley, crowned at several places by archways between buildings. Atget has even managed a special effect in Paris, Au Frasque Plant-Quel Ruchons Paris Boutique Empire Al Fhug., St. Honore, with only lighting. Reflected in the glass door below an elaborate grill is Atget himself with camera, and even the buildings behind him are clearly discernable.

Atget has painted a moody and somewhat disturbing portrait of the City of Light by using its own namesake as the chief aid for his camera. His photographs will be at St. Mary's until Monday, October 28, when they will be replaced by an invitational ceramics and fiber exhibit entitled "Fire and Fiber" which will open November 10. The Moreau Main Gallery is open to 10 daily. Although the other galleries are open until 9:00 each evening.

Appointments can be made to see the Gallery at other times by calling Claudia Traudi, the gallery director. The Main Gallery is in the basement of Moreau Hall, and is reached through the small courtyard to the left of the entrance to O'Loughlin Auditorium.

Shopping is easy. The Kongers down the block is open 24 hours a day and the laundromat isn't far either.

Food. That's one category campus life can't touch. With the exception of Jay, who needs a cookbook to soft boil an egg, we cook up some decent meals: roast chicken, burgers, meatloaf, even steak and lamb. Other than dinner we subsist on grilled cheese and orange juice and a gallon of milk a day. And beer. The average has been two cases a week, but "our potential is unlimited," said Ted.

The major hassles have been with our Hungarian landlord. It took a week for him to fix the hot water heater. The furnace, which was declared unusable by the gas company in August, wasn't working properly until October 7. It took threats of legal action and an angry phone call from Fr. Tallarida, Director of Off-Campus Housing, to get the landlord to repair the furnace properly. Now the electricity isn't working normally. Who knows when that will be fixed? "I don't want to spend any money on the house," the landlord flatly said.

There is a certain isolation inherent in living off-campus, a feeling that the main current of the university is passing us by. "I miss the comradeship of Morrissey Hall," said Jay. Bill expressed the same sentiment: "The neighborhood's good, but it's far from other students, from the bars, and is reached through the small court­yard to the left of the entrance to O'Loughlin Auditorium."

Our life style is unique. "I'll say some weird people" commented Jason one morning after a 5 a.m. escapade playing basketball on the local elementary school courts. To be honest, academics are kept to a minimum and our hours are ridiculous. "The tube" has become a way of life for some. "I gotta get in my eye hours" says Jay. Parties have been both planned and impromptu; one Saturday two of us went off campus and everybody dancing; another time we had a simple Notre Dame "beer blast." The time Julie went down to the Ace-Hi for a quick shot of Southern Comfort and came out with a bag of ice cream a "start" was considered typical. "I thought getting $60 in tickets from Arthur Pears was your average day," he said.

Off-campus life is responsibility and independence. It can be either hard, or wonderful times. It's different. There are no petty Administrative restrictions," but neither is there the House Police, the only treat is a beer, but washing dishes isn't much fun.

Then again, having guests is no problem. There is a price you have to pay for your freedom. Although it is important to distinguish between the myth and the reality of 'off-campus life,' it is a great way to spend senior year.

Nazz offers coffeehouse mood

by Robert Jacques
Staff Reporter

The large room is dark as night, providing a feeling of the personal and the peaceful. Classically reared ears reflect light off flickering candles and blues mingle amidst the sounds of live music from musicians. They are listening, talking, smoking, thinking, dreaming.

This is Nazz, the new coffeeshop which is open free of charge to the students of Notre Dame and St. Mary's on Fridays and Saturdays form 9:30 p.m. to 1:30 a.m. It is located in the basement of LaFortune Student Center.

During the six weeks it has been open, Nazz has been very actively used. Ralph Pennine, manager of Nazz, feels it is very successful.

"Only one weekend, Purdue weekend, the place was not packed for the entire night," he commented. "Even so, he feels that more people do not come because they are not familiar with its existence and have "misconceptions" about it.

Pennine has several dedicated volunteers. Student body President Pat McLaughlin and University President Bill McManus have worked to provide a place for students to go to on the weekends after midnight.

"The University shuts down at midnight. A person is almost forced to go off campus if he wants to do something," Pennine stated.

Food, drink, music provided

Besides just a place to go, Nazz has atmosphere and offers food and music. The concession stand sells tea, a variety of soda pops, hot dogs, hamburgers, candy bars, and cheese and crackers. Pennine hopes to offer wine in the near future.

"Wine makes a nice compliment to cheese," he stated, but it would be served under strict regulations. Any person purchasing wine would have to show positive identification of legal age and would be allowed to buy only one glass at a time with a five-glass limit for the night.

Pennine stated that no beer or liquor and no holdouts or hamburgers will be served so as to keep the atmosphere of Nazz refined.

The Nazz also offers continuous live music performed by members of the Notre Dame-St. Mary's community. Approximately ten groups and individuals volunteer to pay between St. Mary's coffeehouse and Nazz.

"We play for our own pleasure," said one of last Saturday's performers. The five who played last Saturday all agreed, however, that it "tends to be a concert. The people seem infected from talking for fear of disturbing the performers."

In comparing Nazz to the SMC coffeeshop, located in the basement of the dining hall, the musicians said that the SMC crowd tends to be loud and sometimes rowdy. "The atmosphere here (the Nazz) is much more conducive for playing," they agreed.

Anyone may perform at the coffeeshouse. Folk music, jazz, blues, and any kind of skills are welcomed. Rock is not encouraged due to the hall's size. Pennine hoped he could acquire the ND jazz band later this year.

Financial sound

Financially, Nazz is keeping its head above water, Pennine said.

The small profit received from the concessions is sent to a general fund to purchase new tables and candles. Other expenses are covered by student government.

Ford willing to make Nixon tapes public

By DONALD LAMBO
WASHINGTON, D.C. - President Ford said Sunday he is willing to make tapes of any conversations between himself and former President Richard Nixon in the White House prior to Nixon's resignation.

The only condition Ford placed upon such disclosure was the approval of the Watergate special prosecutor. There has been no indication so far whether any Ford-Nixon tapes exist, but Ford has not ruled out the possibility of the tapes being released.

The President made these and other remarks in a discussion with reporters aboard Air Force One as he returned to Washington Saturday night from a three-state campaign swing through the South in behalf of Republican candidates.

Ford asked that his remarks be held for release until Sunday night.

The President said he hoped his historic testimony last week before the House Judiciary subcommittee had satisfied any remaining questions over his unconditional pardon of Nixon from any Watergate crimes.

"Congress had its opportunity, and I really believe that I answered any questions they asked," he said.

Part of the bill paid by student-government is a charge of $4.50 per night to keep the basement of LaFortune open past midnight. Pennine commented, "The Student Union should be open twenty-four hours a day, and at least on the weekends."

He was also concerned about the renovation of LaFortune. Presently none of the $250,000 allotment will be spent on the basement. "Now with Darby's and Nazz, the basement is used more than any other place besides the Huddle," he said. Work on the Huddle has been delayed until spring.

According to Fr. David Schlaver, Chairman of Student Activities, money is not a problem. "I don't feel that money would stand in the way. The Trustees have already granted the money. They're interested in it if it is being used, he stated. He said plans have been drawn up to renovate the basement.

Overlooking anything extremely drastic, he commented that funds could also be gotten from the maintenance allowance.

Notre Dame women attend Midwest athletic conference

by Maureen Flynn
Staff Reporter

Notre Dame was represented at the Fall conference of the Midwest Association of Physical Education College Women last weekend by physical education instructor Astrid Hotvedt. Two students, Ellen Hughes and Barb Breseman, accompanied Hotvedt to the meeting held in Angola, Indiana, October 10-12 and were present for the opening address by Dr. Jo Ann Thorpe.

Breseman reacted to the address by saying, "It's really good that they're trying to do something for women athletes. Hopefully, universities will recognize that women have more potential than they give them credit for." Thorpe's speech dealt with the philosophical aspects of women in competition, and pointed out the traditional stereotyped idea of women in the kitchen versus women athletes. Thorpe stated that young girls have identified with stereotypes and have not given themselves a chance to discover an interest in athletics.

She sasalso raised the age-old question, "If a woman wants to be an athlete, can she also be feminine, and vice-versa?" Thorpe concluded her opinion that women athletes are healthier, have better figures, and are definitely feminine.

Another issue discussed at the convention concerned the legal status of women in athletics and their right to equal athletic opportunities. The big question left unresolved at the end of the convention was, "Is separate but equal equitable? -reasonable?"

According to Hotvedt, "Everybody had their own answer, and the positions varied with the size and situation of each college represented. The problems will be in implementation and sincere cooperation by the present establishment."

The keynote speaker of the conference was Althea Gibson, former undefeated world tennis champion and current professional golfer.

"She was an inspiration to everyone, young and old," said Hotvedt. "She had to overcome the prejudice of being poor, black, a high school drop-out, and a woman, but she believed in herself and didn't mind working very hard. She's also a talented singer and performer, and a very feminine person."

According to Hotvedt, Gibson focused on the idea that existing expectations of women's athletic abilities are not high enough to push even the talented woman to her greatest achievements. "They could be so much better," agreed Hotvedt, "if they were trained like men are trained."

The female college athlete is the main focus of discussion at the university level throughout the nation this year. The Midwest Association of Physical Education College Women includes colleges in the states of Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and Illinois.

Concerning the situation at Notre Dame, Hotvedt stated, "They are definitely feminine, and vice-versa?"

"I appreciate the access to good facilities the women's field hockey team has. Practicing on the Astroturf under the lights is good for skill development," she commented.

"I would like to establish a women's athletic advisory council for advising the direction of women's athletics at Notre Dame," she said. "Anybody who wishes to discuss her athletic interests is encouraged to call Hotvedt at the Rocksee Memorial, 6222."

Hotvedt outlined her goals as a part of Notre Dame. "I enjoy teaching and my first responsibility is to develop skill, fitness, and enjoyment in various activities," she admitted.

"I'd like to be part of developing a rational and equitable women's athletic program. My lifetime goal is to influence students to be more aware as spectators who have some knowledge of the activities they watch," she continued.

Notre Dame prayer book to be revived

by Martha Fanning
Staff Reporter

The campus ministry is in the process of reviving an old tradition—the Notre Dame Prayer Book, Dr. William Storey of the theology department and Fr. Thomas McNally C.S.C. of the campus ministry.

"We are trying to meet the needs of today's students. Many of them feel they need prayer and are looking for help and guidance," McNally stated.

Storey and McNally hope the book will not only appeal to members of Notre Dame and St. Mary's but also to students everywhere.

The new Notre Dame Prayer Book is currently being prepared by Dr. Storey and McNally plan on a section of liturgical morning and evening prayers, including well known psalms, prayers and readings from the scriptures. The largest section will be set aside for prayers on campus. Students should find helpful such as St. Francis' prayer for peace. A section will also be available for prayers written by Notre Dame and St. Mary's students.

"As the book is for the students, "it's absolutely essential that we get feedback and advice from students about what they want and need," commented McNally.

They are encouraged to contribute prayers which they personally like whether they be traditional or original works of their own. Storey and McNally are at this time trying to compile a large variety of prayers from which the ones that will be included in the prayer book can be selected.

Contributions can be brought to the office of the campus ministry in the library or given personally to either Dr. Storey or Fr. McNally.

When the book will be ready is not definite. Substantial progress toward publication is hoped for within the next few months.

The old prayer book, which has all but disappeared from the campus, was once one of the most familiar objects at Notre Dame. Found in many places such as the Sacred Heart Church and hall chapels, the six-four page book contained a large assortment of prayers. Included were prayers at Mass, prayers for success, litanies, and a prayer for sinners. At many spots on the campus the books were made available to students free of charge. As time passed, however, supplies dwindled and were never replenished.

The old Notre Dame prayer book served the students well," McNally concluded. "Although it will be far different in both appearance and content we hope that the new prayer book will serve the new generation of students equally well."

...and doing it." "I am really pleased with our young club," noted Smith, "especially how well handled the pressure of both the overtime and playing NCAA champ Minnesota...they weren't in awe." The kids didn't lose their cool when they got disorganized, they just settled down and came back, playing the basics. Everyone gave a full effort, which meant everything to our young club.

"We really needed that," explained team captain Paul Clarke, "because we have a lot of talent, yet at the same time we were very unsure of our- selves. This win assured us we have the stuff it takes win." Notre Dame has begun their hockey campaign with a win that was not important for league standings, but for their competitive attitude. The Irish players can begin to believe in themselves, along with the disappointment-free fans at Friday night's con- test.

It all starts next weekend in the Zoo-sometimes known as Dane County Coliseum, home of the Wisconsin Badgers. The key to Irish success is hustle and W. Clement Stone's PMA (Positive Mental At- titude), an attitude this eager squad has.

The Irish "D," led by co-captain Greg Collins, limited the Cadets to total yardage of 89 yards, allowing only eight yards through the air.

Cadet Quarterbacks Scott Gillam and Greg McGlasker could manage only one completion in fourteen attempts for the af- ternoon, and the leading runner for Army was freshman back Marcus Hardy.

"We stopped everything that was thrown at us," noted Steve Niehaus, who was in on five tackles, one resulting in a 20-yard run for the Cadets. "We were psychd to play, and Army gave us our chance to do that.

Coach Homer Smith was ex- tremely disappointed over his team's poor showing against the Irish. "We worked very hard to have a chance to possibly beat Notre Dame," Smith said. "When you come up short it is bitterly disappointing.

The Irish were a little more optimistic. As Wayne Bollock put it, "I hope we did jell this game; it was a long time overdue."

Service academies

There must have been some mixed emotions among Saturday's honored guests.

Not only Don Miller and Jim Crowley, the two surviving members of ND's famous Four Horsemen, were pleased with their alma mater's current state, but Army's old faithfuls also realized that this was a thing of the past, just as they were. Army had that competitive edge in the '40s, when Navy and Air Force, has lost that competitive edge. Army has now, offer their players no chance for professional football right after season, but on the whole they are severely outclassed.

The basis of the legend, of course, was a long standing Army-Notre Dame tradition, one that extended all the way to that famous '86 tie in 1946. But now it's all gone.

In its last six meetings with Army, dating back to 1965, Notre Dame has scored only 13 points. In those six years Army, as well as Navy and Air Force, has lost that competitive edge. Army has most likely suffered more than all three service academies can no longer compete with major college football powers. Air Force has been the best of the three and Navy upset Penn State this season, but on the whole they are severely outclassed.

The problem obviously lies with recruiting. In a day and age where high school hot shots are offered the world and then some, the service academies can't come close. What they do offer is a good education, career opportunities and quite realistically a chance to see the world. They also offer discipline, demand four more years active duty, and for now, offer their players no chance for professional football right after school.

"You don't come to Army to play football," said Cadet running back Martin Durr. "We're set up to train people to be career officers. They're just thinking career Army. If a guy comes here to play football, he's coming with the wrong attitude.

Offensive tackle: Hardy, a speedy back who returned a kickoff 100 yards for a touchdown against Duke, was only recruited in his last year by Eastern Kentucky, Western Kentucky and the University of Kentucky, but that wasn't a full ride.

Guard: Blackadar, the Cadets starting quarterback, had a slightly different story.

"I wasn't recruited by anybody," he said. "I went to Army just for the education and when I got there, I decided to try for the football team." Linebacker Sal Colatarci wanted a good education, but didn't have the money.

I ranked high academically and had a lot of Ivy League offers," said the senior from Wayne, New Jersey, "but I wasn't offered much money. I wanted to play football and I wanted to play good schools and West Point offers this challenge.

Still, both Hardy and Colatarci admit that had they been recruited by major colleges they would have gone there instead of West Point. Apparently the military academies are set up to train people to be career officers. They're just thinking career Army. If a guy comes here to play football, he's coming with the wrong attitude.

"I think," offered Hardy, "that you either have to get a program to fit the schedule or a schedule to fit the program. The academies are schools and do well, but it wouldn't mean much," counters Colatarci. "I'm all for playing the major schools. What we need to do is put a little more effort into recruiting good football players."

"I think the service academies have to do something to compete," said Arza Parsegian. "It's over and for a decade that made the military unpopular. But I think they are returning to the prestige they had before. Army is a lot better this year, and I think all three service academies will continue to improve."
