Carter vows to fight inflation; comments on several issues

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Carter renewed his commitment yesterday to do "everything possible" to keep inflation in check, even if this means unpopular economic policies that could damage him politically.

Speaking on a nationally broadcast news conference, his first in nearly 2 months, Carter said he supports efforts by the Federal Reserve Board to tighten credit.

Carter said bailing rising prices under control remains "a top priority." If actions aimed at stemming inflation prove workable, "then that's what we'll do," the president asserted.

Although inflation has soared to an annual rate of about 13 percent, the president said his economic program has reduced unemployment and cut the federal deficit. The program has achieved "very beneficial results," Carter said, adding that he intends to maintain it.

Carter said Pope John Paul II had left "an extraordinary impression" during his week-long visit to the United States.

"We were both surprised at the degree of warmth and enthusiasm among the people in welcoming the pope," the president said of his private talks with the pontiff. "I had no idea it would be that enthusiastic."

Carter said he believes the pope's U.S. tour was "one of the most dramatic and potentially one of the most beneficial visits we've ever had.

In his first public response to an offer by the Soviet Union to withdraw 20,000 troops from Central Europe if NATO holds down its deployments in Western Europe, Carter said the Russians were "offering to continue their own race of modernization as it has been, rather than to disarm at all.

"It's not quite as constructive a proposal as it first looks to be," the president said. "It didn't do very much for the offer, interesting," however.

"I think it is an effort designed to disarm the silliness and naivete of our allies about the threat to ourselves," Carter said. The president said he will work to modernize the forces of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The pope's U.S. tour was "one of the most dramatic and potent," the president said of his private talks with the pontiff.

On the issue of women priests, Hesburgh said that while he had "a great respect for the pope's position," the matter was "too complex" to receive much attention at the conference and so it was "good not to have it discussed with attention.

Discontent over the administration's policies of faculty promotion, tenure, and renewal was also brought up in the initial findings. A decisive majority of those responding favored a formal appeal procedure in faculty advancement questions. Central criteria for promotions and tenure were seen in unclear by a substantial majority of responding faculty.

Faculty Senate discusses attitudes and evaluations

by Tom Hayes
Senior Staff Reporter

The Faculty Senate last night discussed preliminary returns if the faculty attitude survey that was sent to faculty members Sept. 19. Goodpaster, senate chairman, said he is the implication of the partial report is clear, but he added that "certain issues definitely need attention."

Although figures being studied were not complete, Goodpaster indicated that the few responses yet to be compiled would cause significant change in the trends shown by the initial report.

"I have four strong faculty concern pointed out by the incomplete report was the value of student course evaluations. Dissatisfaction with the way in which the university is used to make administrative decision-making was expressed by a margin of two to one. Also in the report, a small majority of the faculty favored abandoning the present course evaluation system.

Goodpaster said these results were a mandate to take a harder look at how teaching quality is evaluated at the University.

"It's a puzzle," he said, "but it is clear that the faculty is not satisfied with the way they (course evaluations) are used.

According to senate discussion, the question is whether student opinion of professors is being measured by sufficient criteria for judging teacher effectiveness.

Discontent over the administration's policies of faculty promotion, tenure, and renewal was also brought up in the initial findings. A decisive majority of those responding favored a formal appeal procedure in faculty advancement questions. Hesburgh fields questions on many topics

by Maribeth Moran
Staff Reporter

After returning from a conference in Washington where he assumed the chair of the Select Commission on Immigration and Refugee Policy, University President Theodore M. Hesburgh last night fielded questions on a variety of topics including the pope's visit, the sitation of the unsettled boat people in South Bend, and the place that the University holds as a leader in world Catholic education.

Hesburgh has been appointed by President Carter to head the select commission that was established last year by Congress. A distinguished group of statesmen and foreign affairs experts make up the committee, including four senators, four Congressmen and four cabinet officers.

The commission plans to submit its report in March 1981.

Speaking before a crowd of approximately 30 students in the Howard Hall chapel, Hesburgh opened the forum with a description of his new responsibilities as director of the refugee commission. According to Hesburgh, this is the first cohesive commission on immigration in the United States since the presidency of Theodore Roosevelt.

As head of the commission, Hesburgh stressed that while the needs of the "boat people" are extremely pressing, there are many other refugees with whom the commission is concerned.

With over 16 million displaced persons in the world today, Hesburgh stated that there are many other peoples to worry about too--Koreans, Hispanics, Cambodians, and many African peoples.

A student in the audience then questioned him on the University involvement in local efforts to resettle boat people to date. The University has taken no official action in extending aid to the United Religious Community and the Southeast Asian Task Force who are spearheading local efforts to resettle the refugees.

"The University is a charitable institution," he said, "we can't afford to spend the money, we have trouble breaking even. We do encourage our students to help though, by taking up a collection or sponsoring a family in South Bend."

Sorin Hall endeavored to take in a boat person this September to live in the dorm. Hesburgh stopped this move because Sorin Hall, "in a student residence for them. If they want to support one in South Bend that's great."

Hesburgh covered a wide range of questions on the pope's visit. He stated that he had invited the Pope to Notre Dame but his schedule was too full by the time that the pontiff received the invitation. He said that the pope's visit was "one of the most dramatic and potent--Koreans, Hispanics, Cambodians, and many African peoples.

Israel considers canceling municipal elections

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) - Israel is considering canceling municipal elections scheduled for April in the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River, an Israeli newspaper reported yesterday. The Haaretz newspaper's military correspondent wrote that Israeli authorities may cancel the elections for fear the campaign would disrupt negotiations with Egypt on establishing Palestinian autonomy in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. The newspaper said Israeli authorities fear that additional election victories by pro-PLO candidates would make it virtually impossible to find moderate West Bank Arabs who would be willing to join the autonomy negotiations.

High interest rates cause stock market dive

NEW YORK (AP) - The stock market took its steepest drop in more than five years yesterday in a day-long slide blamed on spiraling interest rates and fears of a deepening recession. Bank stocks, savings and loans and other financial issues came under particularly fierce selling pressure. A credit squeeze that had continued since mid-January accelerated yesterday, as the selling swept into virtually every corner of the market. Dow Jones average of 30 industrials fell 26.45 to 857.99, marking its largest loss since it tumbled 26.99 points on Jan. 9, 1974, in the midst of the last recession and the Arab oil embargo.

South African problems, politics highlight Friday Conference

By Kate Farrell

The Black Cultural Arts Council and the World Hunger Coalition co-sponsor a South Africa Conference Friday and Saturday at Haggard Hall. The conference will attempt to highlight the politics and problems of the apartheid state with a program of films and guest speakers.

The decision to hold a South Africa conference reflects the effectiveness of pressure to move beyond simple charity and into the realm of justice, according to sponsor of the conference. The sponsors see the conference as a way of calling attention to the problems of structural injustice. Notes conference Director Sata Yang of the Hunger Coalition, "One of the responsibilities of the Education Committee (of the Hunger Coalition) is to increase awareness of such issues."

The Education Committee chose to focus on South Africa because it believes the country to be, in the words of conference advisor Professor Pete Walshe, "a microcosm of the global community."

Walshe argues that while the South African industrial revolution of the early twentieth century brought black and whites together in economic interdependence, the white minority has used Western technology and power to concentrate the benefits of national development into their own hands, and seeks to ensure its material superiority by the "Homeland policy."

Walshe explained that this policy of separate development of the races allows 87 percent of South Africa's land area to the white 20 percent of the population, and leaves the remaining 13 percent to the nation's 16 million blacks, who can develop these "tribal home lands" only under the eye of the white central government.

Thus, as Walshe points out, racism and classism interact to aggravate moral and material deprivation.

Two introductory films will be presented tonight: "South Africa, the Fruit of Fear," will be shown at Saint Mary's Carroll Hall at 7 and 9 p.m. and "South Africa: One Nation Two Nationalisms," will be aired also at 7 and 9 p.m. in the Hayes-Healy auditorium.

The conference actually gets underway Friday at 7 p.m. when Walshe will speak on "The South African Predicament" in Room 117 Haggard Hall.

The Rev. Theo Koze, exiled director of the Christian Institute of Cape Town and presently a visiting fellow of the Notre Dame Center for Pastoral and Social Ministry, will open the second day of the conference with a talk scheduled for 9 a.m. Saturday. Recently escaped, from house arrest in South Africa, Koze will speak on South Africa and the Christian Consciousness.

At 10:30 a.m., the conference will address itself to a topic of growing controversy: the role of foreign investment in perpetuat ing apartheid policies, and the racial practices of foreign companies with production facilities in South Africa.

CCUM director calls for new efforts by women in the Church today

by Jane Kirby

St. Helen Volkomener, executive director of the Catholic Committee on Urban Ministry (CCUM), has called for new efforts to "bring to the attention of the U.S. Catholic Church the gross injustices to the spirit of the yet-loyal women within the Church."

Sr. Volkomener's call came in a study of the Monday Notre Dame, which expressed shock and sadness over the words of Pope John Paul II yesterday in Washington, D.C., concerning women and the Church. The pontiff, before 5,000 runs in Washington's Shrine of the Immaculate Conception Sunday, affirmed the traditional roles of women in the church, emphasizing the patrimony of parochial schools and education.

CCUM is a national network of priests, religious and laity involved in social ministry. Sr. Volkomener pointed out that 5,000 of the CCUM's 10,000 members are women, all involved in social work in urban and rural areas of the United States.

"By singling out the contemplative life, and the work in the parochial schools, linked with the traditional service and dress statements," she said, "the Holy Father failed to support the areas where the struggle for a just society are the strongest—social ministry, in work for peace and justice."

She stressed that the members of religious orders suffer from the same stereotyping as all women in the United States. "The words of the Holy Father, through what he omitted to say, as well as what he said, increased the burden on women and has prolonged the struggle for justice in this segment of society."

Sr. Volkomener blamed the Church in the United States for the "inaudacities" of the Pope's statements. In her opinion, the Church in the United States did not give the Pope "a glimpse of the reality, which includes women in leadership positions, creatively and tirelessly working in advocacy roles bringing about empowerment of the poor in cities and rural areas."

"I think that it is evident that there will not be ordained priestesses during this Pontificate—that is in (John Paul II) responsibility and judgment," Hesburgh noted. "I imagine that there will be women priests someday, although there are 2,000 years of tradition against it. I can still hope. I believe that the theological problem is not insurmountable."

Sr. Volkomener has scheduled an informal discussion tomorrow at 2:30 p.m. in the library lounge on "Women and the Church." All are invited to attend.

brotherhood, family life, and the friendship of the world's hungry and tended to concern ourselves with the controversial issues that made up a small percentage of the pope's statements, he said.

"The pope talked on many issues," Hesburgh said, "and they (the press) centered on sex, abortion, and divorce issues that affect one tenth of one percent of us."

The Campaign for Notre Dame was another key issue discussed at the forum. The downswell goal, when reached, will total some $150 million, putting Notre Dame in the number 12 on the list of private universities. With this money the University hopes to keep tuition down and to provide for everything from philosophy chairs to club sports, Hesburgh said.

"We have the ability to be the greatest Catholic university in the world."

Toward the end of the forum, Howard Hall President Jerry Murphy challenged the student body to keep ROTC on campus that ROTC holds on campus that Pope overlooks "poor people"

Dear Editor:

Unfortunately, Fr. Hesburgh's morning-mass prediction that the Pope's American visit will include "no drastic changes in the Church," looming as more than a long shot. He may be correct, but I've been told comment "because they (changes) are not necessary, and some people in charge of the people of this commentary, and I am strongly affected by the judgment of this mass."

I simply don't believe that "dramatic changes in the Church are not necessary."

Rather that pursue the objective, legalistic tactics of Paul VI to educate and legislate, John Paul II chose the "soft sell," establishing himself as anunloadable leader in heart warming poses, spontaneous witman and spontaneous departures from decorum, interwoven with the humanitarian themes of the Popes. Granted, this tour has worked wonders in humanizing the "Papacy," but the Pope's concern for the "poor," upon closer observation, seems to extend to those outside the Catholic Church as well.

There are a few groups of "poor people" within the Catholic Church whom the Pope seems to have either overlooked or been ignorant of. Among these are:

- the "poor" women of the Church, whose second-class status prohibits the development of full participation in the life of the Church as de facto expressed.
- the "poor" men in the Church who are trapped between the realization that the "poor" need to serve the Church ministerially while engaged in a meaningful interpretation of their "poor" parents-to-be who are faced with the responsibility of a new life without the means to maintain that new life adequately.
- the "poor" lesbians and homosexuals who are being denied a choice, a choice that is for the "poor," one that is not only empowered, but also necessary. (Pope Paul IV's papal approval of human needs is a good start.)
- the "poor" men who desire a meaningful life of the Church, the "poor" women of the Church, and the "poor" men who desire salvation and self-realization.

Dear Editor:

I do not understand all the fuss being made about the Student Union ticket policy. If everyone who worked to make this campus a better place could be compensated for their efforts, we would all be a lot happier. I believe the Pope's statement on this matter is a step in the right direction.

Discipline begins at home

Feinstein asks for parents' help

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - Saying "Discipline begins at home," Mayor Dianne Feinstein is appealing to parents for help in combating attacks by mobs of black youths on white bus passengers.

She also ordered that police officers be used to help guard the buses, saying "They are going for arrests. It's the only way I know to stop this sort of thing."

Police officials said yesterday that they had not yet decided how many officers would be assigned to guard buses. Transit officials said about 20 percent of the buses running at any one time carry an unarmed security guard.

Mrs. Feinstein's announcement late Monday came a day after about 50 black boys and girls swarmed aboard a Municipal Railway bus and selectively beat and robbed the five white passengers aboard. It was the latest in a series of such racial incidents.

"We must have strictness and discipline in the city and most of the discipline must begin at home," Mrs. Feinstein said. She urged parents to "restrict their youngsters at night and no allow them to just be running around the city at 2 a.m., when they are bound to get into trouble."

"We have asked the courts to give strong sentences when these cases come before them," she added. If any of the offenders are caught, she added, "they'll do time."

Bus driver James Pyatt, 38, who black, said the youths aged 12 to 20, swarmed aboard his No. 38 Geary bus in the Western Addition when he stopped to pick up passengers about 2 a.m. Sunday. Pyatt said he called for help on his portable radio but got no response. Then a black passenger, who had tried unsuccessfull fe to stop the beatings, ran from the bus and told two police officers a block away. "People are getting killed on the bus down the street," the unidentified passenger told offi cers Delores Casazza and Rob

er Gt. The officers said when they arrived, about 200 young blacks were milling around the bus. But the crowd dispersed before reinforcements arrived and all of the attackers escaped. None of those attacked appeared to be seriously injured, authorities said.

Police said the youths appar ently came from a dance that had been held at the Booker T. Washington Community Cen

HPC makes plans for Homecoming week
by jana Schutt

HPC met last evening in the basement of Cavanaugh Hall. Speakers on the agenda were Wayne Cumming, a clinical psychologist from Psychological Services, and Students Health Center, Bob Curley, President of the Lacrosse Club, and Ellen Dorsey, homecoming chairman. The winner of the Homecoming royalty was also announced.

After covering business on the agenda, the HPC in an unprecedented move asked all presidents and other spectrums to leave at 7:15 and continued the meeting in closed session on an as yet undisclosed topic. HPC officials refused to comment on what had been discussed.

Pellegrini explained a program planned by the Psychological Services Center which focuses on alcohol use and abuse at Notre Dame. He asked for the council's cooperation in random student survey to consist of 60 questions. These questions would be answerable by either 'true' or 'false'.

The alcohol program will use the information collected in these surveys to determine what services are needed in this area on the Notre Dame campus.

"The surveys are anonymous," stated Pellegrini, "however, students will not be identified on their survey by a letter number as such could clarify the confusion."

America falls in love with John Paul II

by Michael Lewis
Executive News Editor

They loved him. There is no other way to say it.

About 10 million Americans turned out to hear Pope John Paul II during his whirlwind, six-day tour of the United States. They met him with cheers, with banners and with cries of "Long live the Pope!"

There were some, however, who did not share this enthusiasm. Abortionist Madalyn Murray O'Hair led protesters in Chicago and Washington, and Pope's personality.

But by and large, the United States fell in love with the man known as "the people's Pope." The Observer talked with the few of the 1.5 million people who came to the papal Mass Friday in Chicago's Grant Park.

And young and old, traditionalists and modernists expressed their admiration and support for the first Polish pontiff.

"I think he's the most marvelous, wonderful man ever," said Margaret Staneley, 76, of her diocese. Men thought so, too.

Jeff Minak, 17, of Joliet, Ill., said, "It seemed like when he was up there (on the altar) he'd rather be down here enjoying the people. He's got it in a style.

These comments were echoed throughout the day, as the crowd seemed caught up in the Pope's personality.

About 1,500 people traveled from Milwaukee to meet Fr. Jerry Thompson, coordinator for the Spanish Apostolate there, organized the trip.

"I think one of the best things about him that nobody feels his personality," said Fr. Thompson said, "He's him though he's touching crowds of millions of people he seems to touch people in a very pastoral way.

And the people love to go on pilgrimages.

Hesburgh reflects

by Theodore M. Hesburgh
President, University of Notre Dame

I met Pope John Paul II for the first time on September 3rd of this year, about a month ago. The place was his corner office high above Lake Albano in the hill village of Castell Gandolfo. His greeting is warm and friendly. He motions to a chair alongside his desk and sits so close that I could reach out and touch his arm, which I found myself doing while making space. There is one book on the desk between us. No, not a bible, but the World Atlas. He wanted to know exactly where Notre Dame was. Lilckily, the Atlas and a city named South Bend. I told him we could get him over from Chicago in a half hour, and gave him a colored aerial view of the campus, showing him where we could turn out a hundred thousand for Mass on the main mall.

Unfortunately, he was booked and overbooked for every moment of his visit. However, while we couldn't come to visit, he wanted to know about Notre Dame, especially the students. He must confess to some atmosphere and hyperbole in telling Notre Dame men and women, about your faith, your prayer, your loving service, your openness to what is true and good, and beautiful, the promise of your lives for a better tomorrow. I told him he must speak to the young people of America. It would be his first pontificate.

We talked during a fleeting half hour of many things. But particularly he wanted to talk about China, vast land where one-fourth of humanity lives. I gave him a picture of the only church where Mass is offered in China, the Church of the Immaculate Conception in Peking, actually built by Father Metteo Ricci in 1600, and another photo of the two Chinese priests I had met there this Summer and conversed with in Latin. No question that he would like to be in Christ's message there especially. I hope he has the chance. At least, I said, they treated me very kindly and openly and even introduced me to their colleagues as Sherburne, the priest.

Coming back here read a few pages in Hesburgh's latest book, which he has just written, which is a fascinating book on philosophy, 'The Acting Person,' and his small book of poems which is very much of his philosophical training, and also about how Pope Paul VI's own personal vision of his pontificate, of his visit here. It does reveal what he expects a person: first, that he be simple in everything, faithful, simply a human being, and then he starts talking about family, university, country, indeed, the world. Solidarity is his favorite word for this. Also, he insists that a person should not be afraid to be in opposition, loving, caring, constructive when that is called for. Two qualities keep some from being real persons: nonsensibility, standing on the sidelines, being neutral in the face of moral crises, secondly, ostensibly accepting things as they are without trying to make them what they ought to be. His visits to Mexico, Poland, Ireland, and here certainly demonstrate that he is not such a person, that he practices what he elaborates as a budding philosopher, and in his personal and the human condition large and small. He is just and peaceful and joy are important for one and all, both to create and to enjoy.
The Pope's visit offered promoters and peddlers a unique chance to cash in on the religious fervour which swept ahead of the Holy Father wherever he traveled. [Photo by John Macor]

Pope's visit means profit for some

By John McGrath
Senior Staff Reporter

CHICAGO - To most people, Pope John Paul II's visit to Chicago was a solemn yet joyful event. But to others, it meant something else—the chance to make money.

As soon as rumours about the pontiff's American visit were verified, groups ranging from police officers to the Chicago police department shifted their operations, ready for the Pope's arrival. Starting at 7 a.m. the day of the Pope's Mass at Chicago's lakefront Grant Park, countless vendors, ranging in age from 8 to 90 to their mid-70s, started setting up stands or positions in the downtown Loop area. They didn't come early to see the Pope—they came early to hawk their wares.

At first, vendors were amusing themselves, walking the streets of the area, and scouting the various items for sale. But as the day wore on, the number of both sightseers and vendors increased, so did the tension between the people scurrying to get a place among the 1.4 million pilgrims who had gone to see the pontiff's Mass, and the people selling on the corners.

By mid-afternoon, the indulgence and cheer with a full purse—could "buy something to remember the Pope's visit by"—was a streetcorner and at various locations in between. On one stretch of Michigan Ave., one of the city's main arteries near Grant Park, this reporter noted none of the following mention for sale:

Pope Scoops, cardboard ice cream cups imprinted with the pontiff's symbol and image, papal flags, papal banners, papal pennants, papal pins—left at least every different varieties of posters in some areas. As along with Pope Prices ranged from $1 for a bumper sticker to $5 for a poster.

And if those items didn't suit your fancy, other vendors were more than happy to sell you papal paraphernalia, including special edition newspapers. The only group more visible than papal poster vendors were the 6,000 members of the Chicago Police Department, all outfitted in service uniforms and positioned as closely as the street hawkers.

Sgt. James Clarke was stationed near the park. As he looked over the throngs of people coming into the Loop area, Clarke said, "The sense below his vantage point, he took a moment to reflect on the size of the crowd.

"I'm sure there's been no other crowd like this one," he said. "The crowd here and those through the motorcade must have only been compared to the McArthur (Gen. Douglas MacArthur) visit to Chicago after World War II—motorcycle police and military ambulances turned out throughout the city."

Another officer, stationed on the opposite side of the park, said: "The event has been something like this since the riots were here. While admitting that the force would be "tired," Sgt. Clarke said he expected no trouble—and he was right. The only students that were reported involved the appearance of atheist spokesperson Madalyn Murray O'Hair, and some trouble with overzealous vendors.

O'Hair was quickly provided police protection after some verbal exchanges took place among members of her delegation and some people in the crowd. Twenty vendors were arrested for trying to hawk merchandise inside the park, contrary to city regulations.

To handle any emergencies, the city coordinated efforts to establish several types of assistance in the park. Red Cross officials set up stations around the periphery of the area, at least two tent hospitals were available. Illinois National Guard troops manned a number of military ambulances stationed on access roads throughout the area. Over 30 portable concession stands were also located throughout the park. The number would have been much larger, but Chicago police decided to limit the number of outlets to those normally provided by restaurants in the city park district.

Perhaps more eye catching than any of these measures to assuine the crowd was the presence of 1,000 portable toilets set up along the edge of the park near the commuter rail line. "We've been here since 2 a.m.," one of the workers installing the toilets said. "Some of us guys have been working 21 hours straight on moving these things in from construction sites throughout the city."

Transportation in and out of the city was reasonably well handled. The South Shore Railroad, and the Chicago Regional Transit Authority both added extra trains and cars to help visitors get in and out of the loop area as quickly as possible. Line of buses were parked bumper to bumper for several miles on the southern end of the park near Soldier Field, but since automotive traffic was restricted in the downtown area, traffic jams were tolerable.

The Pope's visit was a media field day. Surrounding the 15-foot high yellow and white papal altar were hundreds of thousands of photographers and camera tripods bristling from the rooftop. Shortly after 6 p.m., as the pontiff concluded the Mass, the huge exodus began. Police had estimated that it would take two to three hours to disperse the crowd from the area. Hundreds of thousands of pilgrims walked slowly back towards the grandstands, most laden with papal merchandise, and almost all wearing the obligatory papal button—by a few paddlers, trying to make a last minute sale, scammed of reduced prices, from the street corners.

John Paul's visit to Chicago's center city was over, and while most people expressed feelings of spiritual satisfaction and fulfillment, happy vendors were seen gathering their money and what was left of their stock, heading home, fulfilled monetarily.
Chicago, which ended up in Soldier Field, was thought to be daring, and the anti-Catholicism stimulated by the Al Smith campaign for the presidency four years later still hurts in recollection for those of us who remember it.

What has made the Papacy so exciting to the contemporary sensibility? Nobody knows the answer to this question, any more than we know why just a few years ago young people began to go barefoot. Except in their mystery, the two phenomena are probably unrelated. The charisma of recent Popes is certainly not created by the mass media, and affords an excellent refutation to the cynics who think the media can do anything. The whole world leaped with delight at the irresistible warmth and charm of Pope John XXIII. The media that made this charm known throughout the world didn't know or care that he was the maker of the modern Church, the man who changed the silent mystery of the ancient liturgy into something like a noisy public meeting.

John's successor, Pope Paul VI, managed the difficult task of making this great change go. His ability at doing this is becoming increasingly recognized, but he lacked the nerve-twinging impact of his predecessors and his present successor.

The rousing welcome Pope Paul received in New York underscored the election of John Fitzgerald Kennedy in making it clear that U.S. Catholics were at least generally, if not universally, regarded as first class citizens without handicap. What a contrast with the Notre Dame students of 1924 who battled the Ku Klux Klan in the streets of South Bend.

During the reigns of Pius X, Leo XIII and the early years of Pius XI, until 1908, the American Church was technically a missionary country, under the Congregation of the Propaganda, rather than the direct administration of the Vatican. Indeed, there is reason to think that the suspicions of non-Catholics were at least generalized, if not universally, regarded as first class citizens without handicap. What a contrast with the Notre Dame students of 1924 who battled the Ku Klux Klan in the streets of South Bend.

For one thing, it rallied American Catholics to renewed trust and loyalty in the papacy. Seemingly by the Papal chalice, they turned to reassurance to the Holy See of their devotion and support, which they made manifest in many ways as the American Church grew in wealth and numbers. Many thought that this reassurance was overdone, sentimentalized and out of proportion, in certain quarters, among them many seminaries and convents. But the most important gain was the gradual sensing on all sides that the American bishops, who led the Americanism movement, notably Archbishop John Ireland of St. Paul, were in the main right. The time had come, by 1900, when both Church and state were better off for their separation. Democracy was on the march everywhere, and the spirit of equal... of his poems. I liked best the one called "Inspiration." One can understand him as a young man in reading it. Poems grow out of really deeply experienced. Picture young Karol Wojtyla as a student at the University, reading literature, writing plays, acting in them. Then suddenly war comes and he finds himself a slave laborer; mining and spitting huge rocks in a quarry outside Cracow.

"Work starts within, outside it takes such space that it soon seizes hands, then the limits of thought strikes certainty, a peak..."

... Issues

Papacy

He had to be seen to be believed. The American Church was a mission. Vatican II was the reaction of an open-minded church to the very real changes that were underway. The Pope's message was for the future, not for the past. And it was urgent..."

"If from afar you want to enter and stay in man, you must merge these two forces into a language相通."

This is the time to learn to understand the papacy and the Church, the institution, and its many faces. The Pope is the leader of the Catholic Church, the leader of the world's Christian community. But he is also a shepherd, a teacher, a leader of men and women. He is the representative of the Church, the representative of the Roman Catholic Church. And he is also the leader of the world, the leader of the human race."

Torrential rains delay Series

BALTIMORE (AP) - The opening game of the 1979 World Series between Balti­more Orioles and Pittsburgh Pirates was postponed by a torrential rain storm Tuesday night.

It was the first time the opening game of the seven-game Series was called off because of rain.

Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn called the game at 8:33 p.m. EDT and it was rescheduled for Wednesday night. Game Two of the Series will be played Thursday night, and the Series then shifts to Pittsburgh Friday night, as previously scheduled.

The travel day originally set for Thursday was eliminated.

Gloomy, dark skies hung low over Baltimore most of Tuesday, and the rain began at about 5 p.m. - 3 1/2 hours before the scheduled start of play.

The condition of the field had already been a concern because of the National Football League game between the Balti­more Colts and New York Jets, played Sunday. The Colts-Jets game was the fifth football contest played this sea­son at Memorial Stadium.

The rainout was the first for a World Series opening game since 1973, the 26th postponement in World Series history - 25 rainouts and one because of cold weather.

Both teams said they would stay with the pitchers and lineups they had originally an­nounced for Tuesday night. That means Bruce Kison for the Pirates against Baltimore's Mike Flanagan.

Kison posted a 5-7 record during the regular season, but was particularly effective in September and October. He won four games last month for the Pirates, pushing his eight year career record for September and October to 4-0.

Planagan was the top winner in the majors this season, with a 23-9 record and the Orioles had hoped he could neutralize Pitts­burgh's left-handed hitters - Omar Moreno, Willie Stargell and Dave Parker. The Pirates has switched to right-handed swingers Bill Robinson in left field and Steve Yeono catch­ing, in place of left-handers John Milner and Ed Ott.

Dame goalkeepers, didn't have to make a save. The shouter, credited to Cullather (who start­ted his first game since being injured in the Indiana contest), was his third of the season and the fifth of the year for the Irish.

Kevin Lovejoy's second hat­ trick of the season led a host of Irish point-getters. The Irish displayed some nice pass work when they scored their first goal of the night, with Mike McFarland and Bill Murphy added to Lovejoy's total. Murphy and Kahale also scored in the second half, as did Brian McCurrie, Jim Stein and Steve Kraemer. Assists were credited to Murphy, McCurrie, Kahale(2), Mair(2), Lovejoy and Jay Schwartz. The Irish are now 9-6-1.

PERSONNEL DEPARTMENT
You have to admire the boldness and innovation of the Southold Dance Theatre. At a time when most companies tend to play it safe and stick with one particular style of dance, Southold is experimenting with everything from Tchakovsky and toe shoes to Dolly Parton and high-heeled neon sandals—not bad for a company whose members all work full time in a variety of demanding non-dancing professions. But in dance, as in science, trial results in error as well as breakthroughs, and Saturday's uneven performance at the Century Center's Bendix Theatre revealed a company whose passion for experimentation seems to run ahead of its technical capabilities.

The best piece of the show program came in the middle of the second act, when Southold Dance Theatre II, a group of apprentice dancers performed 'My Brother,' the story of the persecution, disgrace and final triumph of a younger son of a family venerated for their eloquent oratory. The dance, consisting of Giselle, Briseh, Mary De Celles, Francine Ecrich, Carolyn Fermoyle and Cindy Pacifico, performed the best ensemble dancing of the night. Smooth and well-disciplined, they danced without any breaks and showed off some really interesting choreography by Chad Rodda. The two soloists, Rebel Scott Osheimer (the only male performer) and the Woman Elinor Allen (a strikingly beautiful dancer) were also very impressive, especially during their pas de deux which they danced with a very lyrical tenderness.

At Saint Mary's

135th Founder's Day

Katie Conley

Tomorrow is Founder's Day at Saint Mary's, during which the college will celebrate its 135th birthday. Founder's Day is fun-filled with breakfast in bed, a historical picture exhibit, a uniform revue, a hot-air balloon ride, and a formal dinner followed by a special presentation and reception.

Saint Mary's College has an interesting historical beginning. In 1843, four Sisters of the Holy Cross came from LeMans, France to the request of Reverend Edward Sorin to aid the priests and Brothers of the Holy Cross in education. In 1844, the Sisters opened a motherhouse, novitiate, and academy for young ladies in Bertrand, Michigan which is 10 miles north of Notre Dame. In 1855, the school was transferred to its present site.

In 1905, Holy Cross Hall was dedicated. The artificial lake was added in 1905. The next structure was LeMans Hall, erected in 1925. McCandless and Regina Halls were not completed until 1942. McCardless and Regina Halls were not completed until 1966, and Madeleva Hall was dedicated in 1968.

There are many "fun facts" to be found in the early days of Saint Mary's College. In the Annual Catalogue of St. Mary's Academy from 1880-81, it states that "No pupil is permitted to borrow or lend any article of clothing;" and "no jewelry must be brought to the Academy, as its use by the pupils is prohibited. If custom or weak eyes necessitate the use of earrings, they must be perfectly plain gold ones."

Also, "weekly instructions are given in politeness and etiquette, and all that constitutes correct, lady-like deportment." A few items required for each student's wardrobe included nine yards of lace edging, six napkins, one silver goblet, three black aprons for every day, and four pairs each of cotton and woollen hose.

In 1914, the only vacation granted during the scholastic year was Christmas. Board and tuition, including Greek, Latin, French, German, Spanish, bedding and washing, was only $175 per semester.

In number three singles, Paddy Mullen of Notre Dame reached the opening round in Nina Leigh Howard of Miami, the eventual tournament winner, and Carmel Mullen of SMC lost her match to Barb Smith of St. Louis. In the consolations, Mullon rode a bye after a victory over Smith in the semis, where she lost to Sue Viewing of CMU 6-1, 6-2. Earlier, Maenza had lost to Viewing in the second round of the consolation draw 6-4, 6-2.

Sophomore Capitol Shukis reached the finals of the fourth singles category by downing Sue Pulley of Saint Louis and the eventual number one of Miami. In the final match, Shukis suffered a 6-2, 6-3 loss to yet another Miami girl, Sally Schaberg. Placed in the consolation division, Shukis responded with a 2-6, 6-7, 7-6 win in that final, over Mary Hap of CMU.

Freshman Jan Donch, now a normal starter for Coach Sandy Frey's Belles, represented SMC in a number four singles. Donch lost her first match to Schaberg 6-4, 6-3, and then lost to Janie in the consolation 6-5, 6-3.

In doubles, Saint Mary's number one team of Karen Smith and Maureen O'Brien lost their opener to Pam Dodman and Joyce Hull of Miami, and then dropped out of the consolation by losing to Cindy Bagley and Robin Walker of Central Michigan 6-4, 6-3. Sophomores Tina Stephan and Mary Legreany, Notre Dame's top team, lost their opening match to Mary Cornell and Linda Raymones of Marquette, in identical 6-4 sets.

In the consolation, the duo won their first match, before losing to Sue Crowell and Bea Grech-Cumbo of Evangel University.

Sophomore Stacey Ohrmbery and freshman Molly Walsh combined to form Notre Dame's second doubles team. A bye and a victory over a couple of girls from Central Michigan put the Irish duo in the final, where they were pitted against Diane Edelmann and Lori Montgomery of Miami. Ohrmbery and Walsh lost in straight sets, which forced them to play the consolation finals against Terri Bracken and Mo Gibbons of SMC. In that match, the Irish came away with a 7-5, 6-2 victory.

Upon completion of the tournament, Notre Dame coach Joey Segal commented on her team's "first year" performance. "Although we missed an opportunity to finish second, I am very pleased with the team's performance. We were up against some stiff competition, and were beaten by three scholarship schools, which is nothing to be ashamed of. We have played a lot of tennis over the last couple of months, and I know the girls are a little bit tired, so we'll play tomorrow (Monday), and then begin to prepare for the conference." Notre Dame coach Sandy Frey was also pleased with her team's showing. "We didn't do all that bad when you consider the fact that we have three of our girls in three of our first round matches. Our doubles teams showed me that they can play, and I am convinced that we can do well at states. We will have to play extremely well to beat Notre Dame and DePauw, last year two top teams, but I think that we have improved over the conference season, and we are capable of doing just that."

Defeat Michigan

Sports Writer

The Notre Dame golf team won its fall tournament on a stroke over Michigan last Sunday in Ann Arbor.

The Irish fired a less-than-stellar 287, 10 strokes behind second place Michigan, the University of Ohio, which finished at 277. The Irish were 11 strokes behind the Bobcats and 21 strokes behind the Mountaineers.

The Irish were led by Frank LaGrotta, open and easy to spot in the crowd. LaGrotta, who hails from St. Mary's, finished with a score of 74, 10 strokes behind second place.

In the number one singles position, Notre Dame's Cindy Schuster opened against Wendy Sweeney of Miami. Miami's 6-1, 6-1 victory, and eventually advanced to the finals before bowing to Notre Dame's own Julie Bollman.

At the second singles position, Linda Hoyer easily downed her first two opponents, Maureen Fitzgerald of St. Mary's and Becky Crespo of Central Michigan, to reach the finals, where she met Carolina's Johanna Nieminen. In a three-hour, three set final, Lisa captured a hard fought 3-6, 7-5, 6-1.

In number three singles, Paddy Mullin of Notre Dame lost in the opening round to Nina Leigh Howard of Miami, the eventual tournament winner, and Carolee Mard.Atomic, who finished second place second long Central Michigan, followed by St. Mary's, the University of Michigan, Central Michigan University and Marquette University.
