Bangkok flu ails students

By MARY FRAN CALLAHAN
Senior City Editor

Over 35 students have checked into the Infirmary within the last two weeks exhibiting symptoms of the Bangkok flu. The flu, whose doctors perceive is caused by a virus, causes fever, chills, throat discomfort, body aches, coughs and stuffy noses, according to Dr. Robert Thompson of the Infirmary.

Thompson attributed the high incidence of the virus to the prevalence of the flu in many major cities during the month of December.

"These folks are coming back from their different geographical regions after break. We get them from all ends of the earth," the doctor said.

The virus, which is highly contagious, is transferred by respiratory functions. The worst phase of the flu lasts from three to five days.

"We have insisted that their course was right. But many throughout the humiliated land had predicted those Americans would never make it out in one piece.

Jan. 16, 1979, is a good place to begin the story of how the United States, the superpower, became hostage to a band of fanatics and a "78-year-old Moslem ascetic whose name Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini — was to become an American epithet.

On that day, Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi fled the land be his father before him had ruled almost 25 years.

Thompson emphasized that the virus' symptoms to report to the Infirmary so they may be treated with antibiotics.

Governmental gluttony

A carefully documented, front-page story in Sunday's Chicago Tribune confirmed what Joe Average Taxpayer has known since the beginning of time: the government is squandering billions of tax dollars yearly on fraud, unnecessary studies, theft, and bureaucratic bloat.

One especially revealing study, conducted by the Department of Transportation, revealed the remarkable fact that, should guerrilla warfare break out in the year 2027, the United States would need for additional transit police.

The cost of this was a grand total of $225,000.

This laughable scenario is no laughing matter. Rather, it is a tragedy that is having far-reaching effects on taxpayers everywhere: people who are feeling the economic crunch and are simply fed up. Their solution to the problem is usually drastic, such as with Howard Jarvis' tax-cutting Proposition 13.

Proposition 13 was a novel idea when it was first introduced over three years ago. It appealed to taxpayers who were sick of paying more than they could afford, and who thought that by cutting taxes the government would be forced to spend less. Critics of the plan predicted calamity after calamity would result: public half-life, welfare programs slashed, schools closed...the list goes on.

California, the test case in this instance, was fortunate to have a budget surplus of $6.8 billion at the outset. Now, three years later, the surplus has been eroded to zilch, and California appears to be on its way down death creek. The reform cut back highway and school construction days to the point where some high school seniors will not qualify for college. State officials say that further cuts are mandatory: "If we don't run out of "fat" and are even more stringent budget restrictions, all the agencies may seek a broader tax base.

Calculations for California state employees are merely "tokens" for fiscal 1981, and do not even approach inflation levels. But, as usual, the state is keeping$. funds for schools, jobs and parks have been pared to the bare essentials, and the list is expected to be even more stringent budget restrictions.

Through all this, Jarvis insists that there is no reason for alarm. He called the government "squalid as hell" for cutting back on services, rather than reducing spending, excesses.

The man behind this sentiment - that people actually have some control over the government - is a noble one. But, unfortunately, the law is that legislators are tired of being told what to do - they're just too tired to remember that they are public servants. They have enjoyed their position of freedom to spend, spend, spend for so long that they have forgotten how to say no. This is an election year, and the unlimited allowance, they are accustomed to getting their way when it comes to monetary output.

Now, a year and a half after Proposition 12 was overwhelmingly passed on the same referendum that defeated a pay raise for the state legislature. This proposition, shaped after Jarvis', will eventually produce property taxes to 2.5 percent of their assessed value - a large reduction for residents of a state called "Taxachusetts" by many.

The state, which lacked any kind of budget surplus whatsoever, felt the pang of the reforms from the very moment of its passage. Schools were closed, teachers with over ten years of continuous service were laid off, the number of state-funded parks and recreation jobs for students were halved, and then reduced still further. Library hours were slashed, and a hiring freeze is in place, implemented for city employees.

One does not have to be a financial wizard to realize that these are not the "improvements" that the voters had in mind. The government is being vindictive and the average citizen can do nothing about it. Tax reforms that leave the power of money allocation to the one-percenter bureaucracy do not appear to be a viable alternative for the financially-pinched American. It is too easy for a tax-dodging big business to be scrutinized. A broad-based tax plan, with revenue from every corner of the country, might do the trick. It would also serve to enhance the concept of government-level patronage.

Human nature dictates that it is necessary to provide the money-spenders with some incentive for reducing their expenditures. Also, the method of taxation should be reconsidered. A broad-based tax plan, with revenue from every corner of the country, might do the trick. It would also serve to enhance the concept of government-level patronage.

The most disheartening factor in this case is that Jarvis' claim that the government is vindictive appears to be on target. When necessary programs are scrapped and the budget goes into the red, Jarvis has been heard to say, "I don't care what the taxpayers think that at least we all were in this together.

Face it. The three-marlin lunch lives on, and somewhere there is probably a Amtrak being inaugurated at testing the effect of abstract art on a chicken's ability to lay eggs.

After all, it's only money.

Five cheerleaders quit

By ANNE JANE DREGLALLA
Staff Reporter

Five Notre Dame cheerleaders, including co-captains Denise Offer and Paul Broughton, have quit the squad for the remainder of the year, citing academic pressure and personal reasons as the main factors. However, the cheerleaders named a variety of other factors as influences in their decision to leave.

Besides Offer and Broughton, also quitting the squad are Glen Gall, Charles Cohen and Eileen Quinn. The new co-captains are Steve Pasley and Nancy Gawron, and the new cheerleaders, chosen in numerical order from the alternate list from tryouts last year, are Dorothy McGlynn, Michele Fey, Paul Pineda, Drew Fairweather and Dave Sweeney.

The cheerleaders felt their basic problem resulted from the fact that they are "stuck" between the University's activities and athletics departments, and are answerable to both. Though they felt responsible to both departments, the cheerleaders saw the benefits of such an arrangement as limited.

Student Activities provides the group of 13 with a $9,000 budget for travel expenses during the season, a figure which, according to Broughton, does not cover minimum account required. The major portion of the squad's money comes from their sales of various bumper stickers, buttons and patches.

Former co-captain Broughton said, "the hard part was the four away games. Particularly the back-to-back Georgia Tech and Navy games, which we were forced to drive to." This fact resulted in several additional class absences.

Broughton emphasized that "so much work and time out of school is really tough on grades.

The cheerleaders, those both remaining and departing, felt the biggest problem to be with the Athletic Department. Though responsible to this department, the cheerleaders believe they are neglected in several key areas. One cheerleader commented, "we carry a lot of school responsibility in the way of (public relations) and general reputation building. We follow the dictates of people in both departments, and specifically represent Athletics, yet we get none of the extra benefits we need and deserve, like books maybe, but more importantly tutors."

New co-captain Pasley believes that "tutoring could have saved the squad." The question of tutoring, available to varsity athletes, has been presented to the Athletic Department several times but has been ignored each time.

Both the former and present male co-captains are concerned about travel arrangements. The squad flew to all games with the team, a process which has been replaced this year by bus travel.

Students' design wins award

Ten Notre Dame students have been awarded the third place honor in the third year that Notre Dame students designed the model in one university student groups submitting 30 final design reports. This is the first year that Notre Dame students were among 25 design engineers from the Boeing Company.

The Notre Dame seniors who designed The Breeze, were among 25 university student groups submitting 30 final design reports. This is the third year that Notre Dame students have participated in the contest, having received honorable mention the past two years. This achievement is noteworthy in that the students designed the model in one semester, whereas most of the other groups used two semesters in compiling their designs.

Stringent specifications were required for the designs, based on performance, stability and control structure, crew and passenger life support, cockpit design, environmental control system, and maintenance. Judging was performed by 20 design engineers from the Boeing Company.

The Breeze, which accommodates four passengers and two more by folding-down seats, is described as a high-performance, general aviation aircraft, developed to provide rapid transit for business and personal use. It has a cruise speed of 355 knots, gets 20 statute miles per gallon, and has a range of 1,000 nautical miles.

Kurt Weber, Michael Hogan, Mark Ferrigno, Michael Ritzi and F粳 Feran. These students logged more than 1000 hours in the design project. Robert C. Nelson, associate professor of aerospace and mechanical engineering, served as faculty advisor.

Besides working on the overall design of the aircraft, the students also concentrated on the manufacturing and cost of the aircraft. The team estimated the total cost of the aircraft at $469,000. The electronics used in the completion of the aircraft was valued at $120,000. Some of the electronics include a computer which would control the gas flow and make the already efficient turbfan engine even more efficient. The Breeze, in short, will appeal to private individuals as well as to money-conscious business firms and would help expand general aviation into the fast-paced world once dominated by Learjets and commuter airlines. The design specifies there are no plans as yet to manufacture the airplane.

In the spring of 1981, Brian Wilcox and a few of the student designers will attempt to fly an aircraft they are presently building in the Notre Dame Aerospace building. The aircraft will be powered by a gas-turbine engine and will be about fourteen feet long.

not in place,” the State Department official said.

The delays forced President Carter to abandon a plan to fly to West Germany to greet the hostages in the final hours of his presidency.

A Tehran radio commentary suggested that in a final political move to curry favor with the Iranians, the Americans were delaying the release to deprive Carter of a chance to greet them as president.

On Nov. 4, 1979, hundreds of Iranians chanting, “Khomeini, Supreme Leader” flooded the U.S. Embassy — and the hostages.

...Hostages

On April 25, 1980, the hostages had foundered because of equipment malfunction and the subsequent collision of a helicopter and a cargo plane in the Iranian desert.

America’s single attempt to fight back had failed.

In the autumn of an election year, Ronald Reagan seemed victory but feared one twist. It became known as the October surprise. His fear took on substance when Khomeini announced a conciliatory four-point plan to permit the hostages to go free. Carter said efforts to free the captives were underway daily, “directed by me.”

Two days before the election, on a Sunday when rumors of the captives imminent release swept the nation, Iran’s parliament approved terms for making that freedom possible. With all the world expecting an end-of-crisis announcement, Carter went on television to say only that the end appeared near.

Reagan’s campaign plane was in the air at the time and landing was delayed so radios could pick up the president’s words. Reagan didn’t say so at the time, but his advisers told him he had won the White House that day.

Reagan’s victory changed the equation in America. It was now in the interest of both Carter and Reagan to free the hostages before Reagan’s inauguration. And they played events to make it in Iran’s interest.

Carter sent word through the Algerians that he was willing to swap Iranian assets — desperately needed by Tehran to finance its war with Iraq — for the hostages.

Iran showed a flicker of interest. Deputy Secretary of State Warren Christopher flew to Algiers to consult with the intermediaries and introduced a new element. If agreement was not reached by Jan. 16, the Carter administration would turn talks over to OPEC.

Reagan had already tossed his threatening “barbarian” epithet at the Iranians, and his team hinted its approach would be tougher than Carter’s.

Iran now had a reason to send teams of bankers joined teams of diplomats to work out the complicated details. Ordinary citizens were bewildered by the transactions: a billion from here, a billion to there. But they could understand one thing.

The hostages were coming home. America’s humiliation was at an end.

O'Brien remembers Reagan

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) - Knute Rockne was counting on them to "win one for the Gipper." And he says the voters won't be sorry they did.

"Incidentally, Pop Farley commissioned me to expand the activities," according to Katie Clemency, Pop Farley commissioner. "We have expanded the activities this year to unify the dorm and create spirit."

"It was one of Notre Dame's most outstanding student athletes in the 19th century. He arrived at Notre Dame in 1897, residing in Browne Hall. Rockne earned nine letters as an undergraduate, four in both football and baseball, and one in track.

"Farley was recite of Corby, Walsh and Sorin Halls at Notre Dame in the early 20th century. He knew each student in Sorin personally, and referred to each of them as one of "my boys" - thus earning him the nickname of Pop Farley."

"In 1937, Farley suffered a paralytic stroke which necessitated the amputation of his right leg. He died on January 1, 1939. "Pop Farley" week began Sunday with a mass celebrated by Fr. Heaslip today as Class Day, where "The Gipper" half-time plea to spur Notre Dame to a 1928 win over Army."

"Farley recalled. "I wouldn't be surprised if he had something like that (the presidency) in the back of his mind even then.""

"Back then was before "being a liberal and a Democrat.""

"Never-changing Reagan characteristics, said O'Brien, are "his charm and charisma," handy for a president as well as an actor. "I think it's more than that to be a good president." O'Brien added, and he thinks Reagan was to demonstrate presidential ability that "will surprise a lot of his detractors."
Who's been sleeping in my bed?

We reported in yesterday's edition that several hundred dollars worth of stereo equipment was stolen from Sorin Hall over break. While dorm vandalism is nothing new, the recent theft at Sorin was notable because, in the course of the investigation to unravel the crime, Sister Reuter P. David Porterfield revealed that he allowed members of a high school basketball team to remain in several Sorin rooms, the same rooms in which Sorinites had left their valuables while away for Christmas vacation.

The purpose of this editorial is not to suggest complicity on behalf of the Editorial Board in the crime, but to make a point about how we arrived at it. Porterfield was making no accusations regarding whom he suspected the thief. What we do question is a student's right to allow someone to stay in a student's room without the student's consent and with full access to whatever the student has left behind in the room.

The first major point is that Porterfield is not a hotel-keeper, and as such has no right to put up a "vacancy" sign for any reason. According to Fr. Michael Hepp, it has not been University housing policy to allow non-students to reside in the residence halls over break. Heppen says that Porterfield's decision to allow non-students to stay in Sorin was an "exception." The Observer challenges both Heppen and Porterfield to show why such an exception was made and, in effect, has been supported by the Administration as Porterfield has been in no way been reprimanded.

But the larger question here is one of student rights. Had there been no thefts in Sorin over break, the fact that non-students were given direct access to student property with the backing of a rectore might never have come to light. One is compelled to ask if nothing had been missing.

The Observer will look toward Security's investigation of this curious problem with marked interest in the coming days. In the meantime we call upon the Administration to clarify University policy in this area. And if that policy allows rectors to utilize student living space for non-students, at their own discretion, and without student consent (even in the case of "exceptions"), then that policy must be changed.

Inauguration grumbles

WASHINGTON — On this day, as Ronald Reagan takes the oath of office, former Rep. John B. Anderson is moving into his new office at 1426 H Street, one block from the White House.

While the former independent candidate wishes the President well, he's not about to go out and purchase an inaugural license plate:

"I cannot divorce my impressions of Mr. Reagan from the careful attention that I paid to everything he said during the campaign," Anderson told us.

"And when I match his rhetoric with his responsibility, I have a queasy feeling. I'm deeply convinced he does not have the right answers.

Of particular concern to Anderson is Reagan's selection of Alexander Haig as Secretary of State.

"Haig's military frame of reference bothers me," Anderson said. "He makes statements like, "There are more important things than peace, like fighting and dying." I find that very frightening.

I just wonder about the mentality of such a man when he phenomena.

Philosophical and good-humored in his treatment of his troubles, Anderson is once again being misspoken for Dennis the Menace's television father. Nevertheless, the former presidential candidate hopes to maintain some kind of network of communication with "like-minded people" and "activists" from his campaign, after he pays off a $500,000 campaign debt.

"I will be bound by the events that take place in the Reagan administration," he said. In political jargon that means that he plans to be active in the future.

Although Anderson won't confess to entertaining thoughts of another run for the presidency, one can detect a note of interest in his voice. Indeed, once a true politician has run for the presidency it's difficult to get it out of his system.

The White House press corps is muttering that they've never encountered a press secretary as unimpressed as James Brady, Ronald Reagan's new press man. Most reporters admit to attending Brady's morning briefings solely because of the free coffee. To his credit, Brady seems to detect this dissatisfaction, generating those attending the daily briefing with, "Good morning, breakfast clubbers."

While Brady may not seem to know what's going on, he does have a good sense of humor. When asked recently if President-elect Reagan planned to ride a horse in Washington, he declared, "The President will ride but we don't know what.

Ronald Reagan's capacity to ride horses stops at the first-fence. The president-elect underwent a prostate operation several years ago and can't withstand the jolts of a quietly moving horse.

There was some concern among senators on the Foreign Relations Committee about the health of Secretary of State-designate Alexander Haig. Last year, General Haig underwent open-heart surgery. However, speculation about his health won't cost him any votes on the Senate floor.

"Tradition and discrimination abounds," said the late 1930's, Pekin (Illinois) High School has called its athletic teams the Pekin Dragons. Now, however, about 75 Americans migrated to Central Illinois and Pekin's High school administrators were forced to drop the name "Chinks" from the school's sports Mazes several years back. Only this fall, however, did school superintendent James Elliot realize that "Dragons" would be more appropriate than "Chinks" as a nickname. "Miami Beach businesses have learned not to mess with the women's movement. According to the city's Tourism Development Authority, the city has lost $16 million during the past two years because of a boycott by the National Organization of Women. The reason: Florida has not ratified the Equal Rights Amendment. Thus the local city council has passed an ordinance endorsing the ERA in hopes of reversing the city's losses. Mainland neighbors Miami is expected to pass a similar endorsement.

College students, get ready for a moral decade. Two Illinois State legislators have already introduced legislation that would ban X-rated films at state schools. Students are warned that such a show may have to say goodbye to their erotic film festival.

"Commencement exercises are supposed to be upbeat. But Detroit's Mayor Coleman Young didn't paint too bright a picture during his recent winter commencement address to the University of Michigan. "I wish I could tell you all (the real world) is going to be a bed of roses," Young said.

"It's not and I think you know that.

"This country is in trouble," he continued. "We face an economic and social crisis as severe in some aspects as the Great Depression. This severity is not generally recognized because.

Film veteran Vincent Price will portray Irish writer Oscar Wilde in a one-man-stage show, "Diversions & Delights," this Saturday in Saint Mary's O'Laughlin Auditorium. The performance is sponsored by the Student Union.

Price, most renowned for his major roles in horror movies (including House of Wax, The Abominable Dr. Phibes, and Theatre of Blood), also has a number of stage, radio, and television appearances to his credit. He has lectured on Primitive and Modern Art, Van Gogh, and American writers as well, in addition to pursuing his interests in gourmet cooking.

A master of eccentric character roles, Price was fascinated with the prospect of portraying Oscar Wilde. "The time of his wit is enough justification, but under the brilliant facade is a very human being, vulnerable to his own liking, his own strengths and weaknesses," Price commented, adding that Wilde "inspires a kind of very real and identifiable audience admiration and appreciation."

One of the most controversial figures of the late nineteenth century, Wilde was born in Dublin and educated at Trinity College, where he gained recognition as a dramatist and poet. A leader in the new "esthetic" movement, he advocated "art for art's sake," decorating his houses with Japanese prints and blue china cups. His languishing air, eccentric garments, long hair, and habit of carrying lilies and sunflowers around also attracted attention in conservative Dublin.

In the minutes Wilde wrote a number of drags filled with brilliant paradoxes and wit, until accused of homosexuality at the Marquess of Queensbury. The Irish playwright used the Marquess for libel, but the suit was dismissed, and evidence presented at the trial (purloined from several male prostitutes) ultimately led to Wilde's arrest and conviction on charges of sexual immorality. Wilde was sentenced to two years in Reading Gaol for labor, and the master of the English language became a figure of tragedy.

Upon his release, Wilde moved to France where he lived in poverty, relieved by a small income from lectures like the one envisioned in Diversions & Delights. He was often broken enlivened on the eve of his death to his cheap hotel room in Paris. Wilde kicked at the petting wallpaper and told his nurse, "Father it goes of 1900!" He was forty-six years old.

Price, who considers Wilde "a joy to play," named "Wilde's a genius that has never died. He survived. That thing he is in perhaps of paramount importance to the artist is survival. Can you survive? Wilde survived the terrible thing of prison and his genius and we survived beyond!"

The script for Diversions & Delights was written by actor/writer John Gay. Diversions & Delights, starring Vincent Price, will be performed this Saturday evening at 7:30 p.m. in O'Laughlin Auditorium. Tickets for students and faculty are $2.50, general admission is $6. Tickets are available in the Student Union box office.

When he first began playing basketball for Notre Dame in 1978, Mike Mitchell was a highly touted freshman guard, having come off a senior year at Capuchino High School where he averaged 51 points per game and was named player of the year in Northern California.

In his freshman season at ND, the San Bruno native played in all but one of his team's 30 games, averaging a modest 14 minutes, three points and three assists per contest. But, at times, he showed flashes of brilliance, most especially with a 10 point, eight assist performance in an 80-53 blowout of Brown.

Almost immediately, the comparisons began rolling in, with Mitchell's shooting and playmaking ability along with his keenness of court presence, reminded many observers of Rich Branning, who at that time was an established senior on a junior point guard. Both Branning and Mitchell were hard workers, both were born and raised on the beaches of California, and they even looked like each other. It all added up to a very bright future for Mike Mitchell.

Then, in the fall of his sophomore year, Mitchell tore up his knee. A bunch of us were playing ball at The Rock one night," Mitchell said, "I made a move toward the hoop, and my right shoe sort of stuck on the floor. My body went one way and my knee went the other."

As a result, Mitchell tore the cartilage on the left side of his right knee. It was a rather serious injury, but thanks to the "microsurgery" technique, Mitchell was able to play in 24 games last season, but saw limited playing time because of the knee and the arrival of an adequate replacement in John Paxson. But Mitchell went home to California for the summer determined that he could fully strengthen the knee and, maybe, begin to live up to the potential established for him during the 1978-79 season.

But then, it happened again. "I was playing summer league ball in California," Mitchell said, "and during a game, the knee just gave out on me. I'm not even sure how I hurt it the second time."

So, it was back to the doctor in East Lansing for more microsurgery, this time to remove the cartilage on the other side of the right knee. "Now I don't have to worry about tearing any more cartilage in my right knee," joked Mitchell, "because there's nothing left to tear. It's all gone."

It has been a long, difficult road to recovery for Mitchell, and it isn't completed yet. He feels his knee is only about 80-85% healed, and in the meantime he works out three times a week on a machine in the weight room called an Orthotron, which helps build the thigh muscles that become weakened from inactivity.

But Mitchell will probably see some action in tonight's rematch against San Francisco, a school he gave considerable thought to attending before finally choosing Notre Dame. "It came down to either ND or San Francisco," Mitchell said. "I was practically right next to the USF campus, and all my friends from back home went there. In fact, I even went to every USF (home) basketball game from eighth grade until my senior year of high school, and got to know all the players and coaches real well. But I chose ND instead."

"But I don't have any regrets about coming here," he continued. "I've made a lot of good friends and have had a great time."

Mitchell feels that his knee will finally be 100 percent by about the beginning of February. "For now, my role with the team is just to get healthy and give some of the other guards a rest," he explained. "Actually, the bandage I wear on the knee is pretty much psychological. I feel I can play pretty well without it, but all the coaches and trainers say I have to wear it."

Many athletes have seen their careers ruined by serious knee injuries. But Mike Mitchell, despite two separate knee injuries and two operations, is attempting to beat the odds and try to become the fine player he was originally destined to become. Hopefully, he will get his chance.
Lietzke continues winning

Bruce Lietzke extended a couple of career habits with his front-running, record-setting victory in the Bob Hope Desert Classic, but he's concerned that a third, not-so-positive habit could be lurking in his future.

Of his six career victories, four have come at this time of the year, very early in the season.

And, he said, at least half of them have come with him leading all the way, as he did in this marathon, five-day event. "It's a popular thing for me to do, get a good start and live and sleep with the lead all the way. That's the only time I really have fun on the golf course; when I'm leading or have a chance to win," Lietzke said Sunday after leading all the way and closing with a 3-under-par 69. That finished off a week-long performance, spread over four desert courses, in which he shot 335, a dizzying 25 strokes under par and two better than the old record for this, the only 90-hole event on the PGA tour.

"This was probably the best week of golf in my life," said Lietzke, who now has won at least once in each of the last five years.

If it should happen again, Lietzke has $50,000 — the winner's share of the $304,500 purse — to tide him over and buy gasoline for his pride and joy, a custom, souped-up Trans Am and its 500-plus horsepower engine that gets about five miles to the gallon. He drives it from Tour stop to stop, he said, "because I don't like flying. I'm not afraid of it, I just don't like it," he said. Then he grinned. "But I'm flying low now."

For Digger's squad

A sweet, sour season

Louisville — "Everything's coming up roses ..." He wouldn't say it, but it had to be on his mind. After Richard Frederick Phelps (a.k.a. Digger) had led his team to a 67-61 win over the University of Kentucky, he had to be thinking: "God, I'm glad it's over!"

"If" of course was the monkey that had been on Digger's back since the last time he'd won in Freedom Hall back in 1975. In fact, there were but two people associated with this team that could ever remember that night; Phelps and assistant coach Gary Brook, who was a starting guard on the 1975 squad.

But, as they say, anything worth having is worth waiting for, and though the drought was long, the relief was final. The victory is over.

Oh, so sweet! And the celebration that followed well, we won't go into that. Just so that it was a fitting end to one of the most memorable nights in Irish basketball history. Well deserved! But of course. And it looked like the first of many more to come.

South Bend — "There's nothing wrong with this basketball team." Digger was saying after practice yesterday. "For five weeks we were a very good team and we beat some very good teams. Then we lose a few games to some very good teams and right away we've got a problem."

"Well, as far as I'm concerned we're still a very good team, and, though the losses are disappointing, we are not ready to fly the white flag and abandon ship!"

Ask for explanations and Digger will oblige — quickly reminding that they are just that, explanations, and not excuses.

"We had some critical breakdowns in defense against Marquette and San Francisco and that hurt us," he begins. "Then we couldn't hit our foul shots and that killed us. Coaches constantly stress that fundamentals win games — foul shots, defense — but not until you're in a situation like we faced in Milwaukee or Oakland, is it clear."

"If we hit foul shots against San Francisco like we did against Kentucky, we win the game."

The obvious question then is, why couldn't they hit the foul shots against San Francisco like they did against Kentucky? When it's suggested that road trips and jet lag and no real vacation and living in the Morris Inn for a month might be a factor, Digger smiles but refuses to agree.

"I think that our players get used to the routine that every student follows through the year," he says. "And it's true that what we face over Christmas break is tough."

...DeCicco

Coach of national championship teams in 1977 and 1978, DeCicco has turned 15 American-born All-Americans. Even more impressive are the 18, 26, 31, and 122-match winning streaks that have occurred under the leadership of the man they fondly call "the Italian Peter Pan."

As important as the victories have been the recognition of DeCicco's talents by his peers. In addition to being named "coach of the year" by the American Fencing Coaches Association in 1966, 1975 and 1977, DeCicco was selected to coach the United States World Games fencing team in 1970. Further testimony of DeCicco's contribution to fencing was his selection to the Heim's Hall of Fame in January, 1978.

More recently, DeCicco served as team manager of the United States fencing delegation which competed at the World Games held in Mexico City in the fall of 1979. Also, he acted as Chief of the U. S. Delegation to the Junior World Fencing Championship, held in Venice, Italy, last April. DeCicco, who is also a professor of mechanical engineering and the athletic academic counselor, has coached the 1981 Irish fencing team to 1-0 date thus far.

Then back to the old grind.

"But there's no other way to do it," insists Digger. "We do things the way we feel is best for the program and best for the Notre Dame student-athlete."

And there's the key word.

"Do you realize we've played six road games and only missed one day of classes?" Digger reminds proudly. "And when the whole season's over we'll have missed only two more. To play a national schedule and miss only three class days all season is what I think college athletics is all about."

"These kids are students first and we keep that in mind with every decision we make concerning the team."

Still it's a factor. It's a good reason why every game isn't a run of Kentucky. In fact, it's probably the best reason anyone can think of. And it's not an excuse. It's just a simple fact of life that has plagued Notre Dame basketball players for years.

"This kind of schedule gets us ready for the tournament," Digger emphasized. "That's when it really gets tough. For instance, when we go to the playoffs we might be out of town for four or five days at a time. It's tough then like it's tough now, but if we do it now it's not a new experience for us."

"I want to show them every situation they might face in the playoffs because that's when it counts. And I want them to be prepared.

So all Digger's planning and conniving and even those "obvious" blunders might actually turn out to be nothing more than carefully conceived foreshadowing. Results might not be apparent until uh ... say Monday, March 30, on the floor of the Spectrum in the City of Brotherly Love.

When it counts ... when it really counts.

Borg takes tennisourney

(AP) — Bjorn Borg says the Volvo Grand Prix, Masters won't become a major tennis tournament until a player can lose a match and still win the championship. However, it was just that road that the magnificent Swede traveled before destroying Ivan Lendl 6-4, 6-2, 6-2 Sunday for a $100,000 first prize in the $400,000 event. Both finalists had controversial losses Friday after qualifying for the semfinals with two victories on the first two rounds of round-robin play.

Wait for USF revenge

Irish control Fordham

By T.J. PRESTER Sport Writer

Third-year coach Tom Penders of Fordham University said this could be the year that his squad would knock off perennial favorite Notre Dame. Fortunately for Digger Phelps and his fighting Irish squad, Penders was wrong — just barely.

Sparked by subs Maxwell Davids and Steven Samuels, Fordham made a valiant run at the Irish before finally succumbing, 67-61.

"Notre Dame is tough and we knew they wouldn't crack but with (Tracy) Jackson's unfortunate injury, it gave us an opportunity," said Penders.

An injury to senior three-guard Tracy Jackson early in the first half diminished the Irish firepower from outside but sophomore forward Bill Calhoun helped pick up the slack by tossing in five of seven field goal attempts and totaling 12 points.

"The status on Tracy is still up in the air but it is doubtful that he will play Wednesday against San Francisco. We have hope for his return for Saturday's game against Maryland but we'll have to get the results from the X-rays first," said Phelps.

Notre Dame was also helped by the strong inside play of rare starter Tim Anderson who contributed to a season high seven rebounds. Kelly Tripucka, the customary Irish scoring leader, netted 21 points en route to tying eight-of-14 field goals and a perfect five-for-five from the free-throw line.

"I think we played well early and could have possibly built our lead up to 16 or 17 points but a couple turnovers kept it close," commented Phelps.

Penders praised Andre's in his starting role and seemed to be pleased with the help from the bench. "Tim and Andre gave us a solid twenty-three minutes tonight. He did make a couple turnovers when he tried to force a couple passes but overall I'm quite pleased with his performance," said Penders. Varner helped pick up the slack when Tracy was hurt and showed a lot of poise when he hit a long jumper late in the game," said Penders.

"Andre's performance is the kind of performance that we need from the center position, especially Wednes- day night against (Wallace) Bryant," added Phelps.

Fordham managed to pull within three late in the game but a Tom Slaby 18-forer followed by a three-point play by Tripucka nudged the Irish advantage to 56-48 with six minutes remaining.

Stubborn Fordham continued to make a comeback by using the outside shooting talents of guards Tony Foucuhai, Mark Murphy and Max Well before finally running out of playing time. IRISH ITEMS — Coach Phelps committed himself to starting Andre Jackson against San Francisco after his fine performance on the boards — He also said he expected Varner to step into the starting lineup with the absence of Jackson — Bill Calhoun, Fordham's Most Valuable Player last year, was limited to four points while substitute center Daud Tongo tallied in 10 points and grabbed a team leading six rebounds — Kelly Tripucka's 21 points pulled him within four of Don 'Duck' Williams, who is sixth on Notre Dame's all-time scoring list — Gilbert Salinas suffers from a pulled ligament in his knee and will probably not see action until the South Carolina game in the ACC on Jan. 31.

Against Taylor

Belles come up short, 63-60

By DAVID WILSON Sport Writer

Despite a furious defensive effort in the closing minutes of an exciting basketball contest, Saint Mary's suffered a heartbreaking loss at the hands of Taylor University last night, 63-60. The Belles, who led by as many as fifteen points early in the game, simply failed to cash in on a number of key turnovers late in the second half and Taylor escaped with the win. The loss left the Belles at 6-5 for the season while the Trojans improved their record to an even 6-6. When asked about the reasons for the loss, Coach Jerry Dallis could find but a few.

"We did a good job of forcing them into turnovers when we needed it," said Coach. "Our real problem was in not being able to capitalize on these mistakes."

Taylor just shot the lights out in the second half (59 percent from the field) we only shot 36 percent, which has got to be our worst shooting percentage this year. The shots just weren't dropping," said Saint Mary's spokesman.

Saint Mary's played a brilliant first half, posting a 22-point offense and taking a 18-10 lead at the 14:00 mark which helped en- courage the Trojans' late first half surge led by Maxwell and Samuel who ac- counted for half of Fordham's first half points.

Samuel's slick move inside the lane with 1:03 remaining in the half pulled Fordham within five before going into intermission with a 35-28 deficit.

Offensively, the Irish built their lead in the first half by reversing the ball quickly against the zone, somet- hing the Irish had failed to do in their three most recent outings.
