Jerusalem sovereignty

Blackwell stresses independence

By MIKE O'BRIEN
Staff Reporter

Former Cincinnati mayor Kenneth Blackwell, keynote speaker at a day's Jerusalem Committee meetings held in Notre Dame's University Conference Center, pro­claimed the situation of the ancient city to be a "power base and not a fragmentation of power." He declared that the Jerusalem Committee must remain in control at all times.

ByKeynote speaker Blackwell said in his speech that the ancient city must remain undivided and under the control of Israel. He stated that Jerusalem must not become another Berlin, and that the problem of Jerusalem is to leave the city undivided.

"It is not an accident or an operation of destiny that 300,000 Jews live in Jerusalem," Blackwell said. "If Jerusalem is divided, it will become like another Berlin.

The Jerusalem Committee must remain in control of the city, and its members must be able to work with Israel, he said. The Committee is con­	ructing a new building and is in need of a mayor and a director of the Committee.

The Committee's purpose is to resolve the political dilemmas of a metropolis whose name means city of peace, but whose history has been, trivially, anything but peaceful.

Jerusalem sovereignty

Blackwell stresses independence

By MIKE O'BRIEN
Staff Reporter

Jerusalem sovereignty

Blackwell stresses independence

By MIKE O'BRIEN
Staff Reporter

The unification of Jerusalem under the control of Israel was the topic of discussion at the Jerusalem Commmittee's two-day conference, held in the Center of Continuing Education. The two-day conference, being held in the Center of Continuing Education, was followed by a brief history of Notre Dame.

Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek, founder of the Committee, and former Cincinnati mayor Kenneth Blackwell (see related story) set the agenda in the Committee's final meeting to address the structural problems plaguing the city.

Mr. Theodore Hershey opened the two-day conference, being held in the Center of Continuing Education, with a welcome address, followed by a brief history of Notre Dame.

Mayor Kollek, in his keynote speech to the Committee, stated that Israel is ruling Jerusalem better than anybody else. He charged that under Jordan, which ruled the city until the Six-Day war of 1967, Jerusalem was a "divided, dead, neglected city.

He added that internationalization of the city failed, and that Arab nationality would partition Jerusalem, and that Jerusalem should never be divided again.

The mayor also said that with 150,000 Muslims from Arab nations as well as half a million Christians visiting the city's religious shrines each year, Jerusalem has tolerance and freedom of worship.

The committee members then joined ND faculty members, distinguished guests, local officials, and representatives of the press in a dinner held at the Morris Inn.

The conference continued with participants gathering into four discussion groups, dealing with the physical planning, legal and long­ term status, religious, and co­ ceremonial aspects of Jerusalem.

This session was closed to the media.

Today, the committee members held a closed door briefing of the internal political situation of Jerusalem. Morning sessions dealt with planning problems and the results of last night's working com­ mmittees.

A press conference scheduled for 1:00 p.m. in Room 112 of the Center for Continuing Education will conclude the meetings of the Jerusalem Committee.

Greater freedom

ND Senate approves constitution

By DIANE DIBBS
News Staff

New provisions in the Campus Life Council (CLC) constitution approved at last night's Student Senate meeting will allow for greater student freedom and power in that council, according to Student Body President Paul Riehle. Foremost, Fr.
John Van Wolve, vice president of Student Affairs, was eliminated as a voting member of the CLC, although he may still sit in on the meetings.
Also, a provision allowing secret balloting was passed.

The president opinion of Senate members was that the CLC should consist of both legislative action and dialogue with the administration.
Riehle stressed that "half the members of the CLC are on the Student Senate. We have a direct input and power base in the CLC.

The aim of the Student Senate, according to Riehle, is to work in a
"step-by-step process in which we can get student input articulated to the administration.

The three-step procedure to establish this communication was outlined as follows. Mondays, the Student Senate meets and discusses proposals put forward by the other committees or brought to the floor by the Hans Hoeremann controvoy. Tuesdays, the Senate votes to allow the proposals to be brought to the floor. Wednesdays, the Senate meets to finalize the proposals.
See VENDOR, page 3

Vending machine pioneer remembers old days

By JUDY DAUBENMIER
Associated Press Writer

DEN MOINES, Iowa — Until F.A.
Wintern came along, people who bought cigarettes from vending machines used to find their change stuffed under the cellulose of the cigarette packet.

It was Wintern who first found a way to make a vending machine give back correct change. He built the first one, by hand, in 1946.

"It wasn't a matter of how many I could sell, but how many could make," Wintern, 80, said as he showed off his original machine, now standing in a corner of his office.

His invention put an end to the

ND grad dies

Laura J. Rohrbach, a 1980 Notre Dame graduate from Saratoga, Cali, died Tuesday. Ms. Rohrbach, a first year law student at Santa Clara State University in California, suffered a cerebral hemorrhage last Saturday, and died Tuesday night.

A biology major, Ms. Rohrbach lived in Lewis and Lyons Halls while at Notre Dame, and was a member of the crew team. A memorial service will be held tonight at 11 p.m. in the Lyons Chapel.
Millions of Polish workers stayed off the job yesterday in spreading wildcat protests that had crippled industries nationwide. The strikes were called in reaction to government of creating "another dangerous crisis" by failing to live up to promises made during last summer's widespread strikes. The independent trade union, Solidarity, in an apparent attempt to regain control over its local unions, also proclaimed a nationwide one-hour warning strike for next Tuesday. At the same time, however, Solidarity urged an immediate end to the spontaneous local and regional protests and called for talks with the government. Solidarity accused the government of putting the "brakes" on negotiations reached after last summer's strikes including a five-day workweek, union access to the news media and the farmers' right to form unions.

In Berkeley, Calif., where liberals have not-so-fond memories of Ronald Reagan as governor, a University of California group announced the city's secession from the United States in response to Reagan's ascendency to the White House. Leaders of the "Legitimate Aspirations of Third World Peoples." On a distant coast, agreements reached after last summer's strikes including a five-day protest and reaffirmed its willingness to open talks with the government for concessions won during last summer's widespread strikes. The warning strike for next Tuesday. At the same time, however, Solidarity printouts and other assorted paper will flutter down from office tribute to 23 former hostages. But were it not for a Norwalk, Conn., firm, New York's welcome to the returning Americans would not be carded their old tickers for computerized electronic price displays and video screens. So, earlier this week, Trans-Lux Corp. trucked 100 tickers to Koch's office. It won't be known if Koch's promise is met until miles of yellow and white ticker tape from its Connecticut headquarters winds its way along the parade in New York history. Ticker tape has been in decidedly short supply since 1960.

James W. Frick, vice president of public relations, alumni affairs and development for Notre Dame, was honored last week as a Knight of Malta in ceremonies in St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York City. Membership in the Order of Malta is one of the Catholic church's highest honors. The organization, which traces its origin to the 11th century, selects new members from leading Catholic clergy and laity. Frick, who received his undergraduate degree and a Ph.D. in educational administration from Notre Dame, joined the University's development staff in 1951. He became director of development in 1961 and four years later was appointed vice president for public relations and development, the first lay person to be an officer of Notre Dame. Terrence Cardinal Cooke, archbishop of New York, presented the Order of Malta to Frick at a banquet that night for new members and their families in the Waldorf Astoria. The only other Notre Dame person currently holding membership in the order is the University's executive director emeritus, Edward "Moose" Kracoe, invested in 1972. - The Observer.

A grant of $183,251 from the National Institute of Health to support the work of John Baross of the University's Victor Biology Laboratory topped a list of awards totaling $750,235, accepted by the University. The grant has been awarded according to Robert E. Gordon, vice president for advanced studies. The NIH award will support research into the affects of vector competence in Arteriobacter, discovered by George B. Craig, Jr., the George and Winifred Health Microfilm Collection. - The Observer.

It is necessary to expand on a point we touched on briefly last week, that is, the use of the phrase "shift" to rationalize the reversing proportions of Ronald Reagan's victory. This phrase keeps cropping up in the most unusual places, and yet, of course, it fits. It continues as a realization, as if millions of people, biting in their heels before the head they could have had a fit, are exclaiming, "Wow, I sure was stupid to be liberal all those years.

There are many theories being floated these days to explain the November debacle, with many (such as conservative commentator John Birch) saying that Jimmy Carter's presidency left in America's mouth. But that's too easy. We must give the average voter more credit than to ascribe his voting patterns to one obvious rational. However, to label this collective vote a "conservative shift" is giving him too much credit.

Voting is a much more individualistic thing than it used to be not long ago. The urban machines are dead. Jane Byrne is living proof of that. Labor union support doesn't nearly guarantee the support it once did. Birch Bays will attest to that. Most importantly, party lines are blurring, and voting the straight ticket is becoming a thing of the past.

The importance and power of political parties in this country is decreasing proportionally to the major candidates' responsibility and loyalty to the party organization. The advent of television, whose political impact we have already dwelled on in this space (and all the more so on a lesser extent), coincided with the rise of this new political scenario. The electronic media produces better quality candidates who were able to reach the voters through the help of the local and regional workers who used to play a primary role in getting out the vote. Finances were directed towards this new, more effective form of campaigning, and the local organizations dwindled.

At the same time, candidates were able to formulate their own ideological platforms, with little effective to put from the party. As a result, candidates are now no longer answerable to the party line and vice versa. It is used by those party candidates who didn't stick to the agreed upon platform would be defeated by the party in the next election. But the weakened stature of parties enables candidates to bypass them, through television, so that their candidates now is to raise money for whomever the electorate selects to be their nominee from the primaries. (The stupidity of the primary system and the weaknesses of national conventions is another column.)

What the 1980 election do call to the stinging of two significant political power bases, and more significantly, the beginning of a dangerous decline in the two-party system. Not all of this, of course, is attributable to the election of Ronald Reagan. Political science has been raised through increased awareness of the plight of the poor, the need for social justice, and the Roosevelt as a common enemy. There is still a significant number of voters who are still willing to make the effort to vote in a courage of freedom of choice, for better or worse. But that brings us back to the insidious "conservative shift."

Since the Depression, the nation's social consciousness has been raised through increased awareness of the plight of the poor, the need for social justice, and the Roosevelt as a common enemy. There is still a significant number of voters who are still willing to make the effort to vote in a courage of freedom of choice, for better or worse. But that brings us back to the insidious "conservative shift."

But that does not signify a massive ideological shift - yet. The right is still far from a majority. In this election year, conservatives were able to muster a well-coordinated national campaign which made the liberal issue the issue, and the issue won the opposition. The result was an easy target. The electoral effect was noticeable, to say the least. But to say that the campaign resulted in a nationwide "conservative shift" is a gross misnomer. Carter - Reagan was an ugly choice, but it had to be made. Perhaps. But, as usual, it's a story for another time.
Fifty years later, the firm, Fawn Engineering, turns out 20,000 vending machines a year for dispensing everything from soup to nuts.

Wittem is still chairman of the board of the Des Moines-based firm, which employs 500 people, sells vending machines in all 50 states and exports about 15 percent of its machines. The president is his son, F.A. Wittem Jr.

Wittem, who had no formal engineering training, began tinkering as a youngster. One winter, he and his father took apart their new Ford automobile and put it back together — very carefully.

"My mother thought we were all bananas," Wittem said. "But after we put it all back together, my father said, 'Now if the darn thing breaks down, it's all your fault.'"

Wittem told how one of his ideas attracted presidential attention.

During World War I, he wrote to President Woodrow Wilson to suggest an underwater magnetic mine for use against German submarines. The Defense Department responded by offering Wittem a job, not realizing they were writing to a 16-year-old boy.

Wittem said his favorite invention was a peanut machine that rang a bell and dispensed a free portion of peanuts to every ninth person.

Wittem recalls carrying the peanut machines under his arm and walking into bars playing to peddle them to bar owners. He promised they'd buy the machines if they didn't sell more peanuts than the bar's old machines.

"I never had to pick up one," said Wittem, whose firm made half a million of the machines. "It was like Russian roulette. It added a uniqueness to it that the other (peanut machines) didn't have. People liked to gamble on hitting the bell. They would empty a machine in one evening.

"In those days, Fawn, or Hawkeye Novelty as it was known until 1947, was totally a family business.

"I worked night and day and Saturdays until we got started," Wittem said. After their son was born, Viola Wittem brought him to the factory in a basket while she ran a punch press or sat on a nail keg and did typing.

Wittem boasts that his firm had only one losing year, but making ends meet wasn't always easy. Sometimes he had to hack his wife's wedding rings to make payroll.

"It wasn't a thrill," Wittem said.

Wittem also pioneered the practice of selling machines to individual business. Most vending machines are still owned by firms that lease space in restaurants, bars and other establishments and give the firms a small cut of the profits.
McBrien discusses justice

By CONNIE COONEY
News Staff

What is the Church? What is justice? What is the meaning of "the mission of the church?" These questions were the main theme of Rev. Richard McBrien's seminar on "The Mission of the Church and Justice" held last night in Carroll Hall at Saint Mary's.

Fr. McBrien is the chairman of the Theology Department at Notre Dame. He has appeared on CBS-TV covering the Vatican, and most recently, the visit of Pope John Paul II to the United States. Fr. McBrien has also received the John Courtney Murray Award, which is given to the most prestigious theologian in the country. In addition to these accomplishments, he is the author of two books and many articles dealing with the roles of the Church.

Rev. McBrien answered the question, "What is the church?" by saying that "the church is the whole body of Christians, although not necessarily only Catholics." He continued, "If you criticize the church, you criticize yourself."

"Justice is a virtue concerned with the rights of the people, where all the rights are respected and protected," Fr. McBrien said. He categorized "justice" as a) commutative, b) legal, c) distributive, and d) social. He also quoted Pope Paul VI as saying, "Peace is the work of justice." Fr. McBrien added that "a Roman Catholic's pursuit of justice is a necessary part of the Church's mission."

Rev. McBrien stated that "evangelization is the preaching of the gospel." Pope Paul VI told us that one must have a social justice background in evangelization, or it is not evangelization." Fr. McBrien ended by saying, "Justice, Justice should be done inside the Church as well as outside." He summed up the hour-long talk by saying, "The mission of the Church is to be a sacrament."

A 30-minute question and answer session concluded the first presentation of the Christians and Justice series, which is in its second year. Three other seminars in the series will be held on Feb. 11, Feb. 22, and March 25.

Keenan Revue ticket distribution

The Keenan Revue is scheduled for Friday and Saturday, Jan. 30 and 31, 8 p.m. in O'Laughlin Auditorium at Saint Mary's. Tickets will be distributed today from 4-6 p.m. at the Washington Hall and O'Laughlin Auditorium box offices. Admission is free. A reception will follow the Saturday performance in the Keenan Kommons.

Social skills workshop offered

The Notre Dame Counseling Center will offer a workshop in dating and friendship skills, establishing closer personal relationships and improving self-confidence. The program consists of eight two-hour weekly meetings which will be held in room 400 of the Administration Building, in the Counseling Center, on Tuesdays from 1 to 3 p.m. beginning Feb. 3. There is only a limited enrollment available, so interested persons should sign up as soon as possible by calling the Counseling Center (1718) and leaving their names with the receptionist.

Some of the specific skills that will be taught during the eight-week workshop include attending behavior, giving feedback, initiating and ending conversations, continuing conversations, handing silences, initiating social contacts, making requests, and giving and accepting compliments. The process used to teach these skills includes discussions, written handouts, videotape models, role-playing, feedback, and homework assignments.

Buy Observer classifieds
The past week has been a reunion with some that have occurred lately, has been memorable nonetheless. Uncle Duke, one of Garry Trudeau's most popular characters, reappeared this week after an absence of roughly 444 days. Though he was last seen in a television spoof squad, those of us who have followed Duke's career closely and those of us who have known the non-fictional journalist Duke is based on, never doubted that he would emerge unscathed.

Uncle Duke is the writer turned diplomat who has served not only as Governor of American Samoa, but also as U.S. ambassador to China. As those who follow the comic strip well know, Duke was last seen around the time of the takeover of the American embassy in Iran. He had been sent into Iran by a large American oil company to perpetrate clandestine deeds against the Ayatollah and his cohorts. Unfortunately, after he parachuted into Tehran he was captured by militant Iranian students who planned to execute him. However, the quick-witted Duke was unimpressed by his captors and their threats, and immediately began negotiating—albeit Duke fashion and with a chair—for his release. When last reported, he had offered several hundred thousand dollars in gold which he felt his backers would be foolish to refuse to ransom to validate a man as he.

As we found out this week, Duke, no less, was writing for the American oil companies who would come up with such $$300. The Iranians, apparently tiring of the free expression of varying opinions on campus, through letters, is encouraged. Uncle Duke accepted that offer nonetheless and Duke is subsequently a free man today recovering in an Army hospital in West Germany. His ‘cause is not one of gratitude or enthusiasm as most of the other hostages, but one of annoyance, restlessness, and a lust to get on with life. For Duke’s life and his restlessness, and a lust to get on with life, there is any blood relation between Duke and Sonker. In any case, ‘Uncle’ is how Zonker addresses Duke and is the few panels where Duke’s wife has appeared Zonker has referred to her as ‘Aunt Sandy.’ The first time Doonesbury readers met Duke he was a gun-wielding, drug-imbibing journalist for Rolling Stone. His trademark cigarette holder, dark glasses, and sparse-mess of hair (as well as his cynical and self-serving philosophy) quickly endeared him to many of Trudeau’s readers. Since that time Trudeau has used Duke to comment on the Panama Canal situation, the Mayaguez incident, relations with China, Cuban anti-imperialism, oil conglomerates, homeless shelters, and the list goes on and on. That’s a wide range of interests and intrigues for any man, fictional or not.

What is most amazing though, is that Duke actually exists. Like Kilgore Trout who is an actual science fiction writer as well as a character in the novels of Kurt Vonnegut, Duke is a “real person” moonlighting in a fictional role. Not only does Thompson, the journalist, wear dark glasses, smoke a cigarette holder and have a widowed Sandy; he also lives in Aspen, Colo., (as does Duke), ingests mind-altering drugs on a regular basis, and shares Duke’s fondness for drinking, betting, and shooting loud firearms. Thompson is the author of three books (the most famous of which is the counter-culture classic Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas), and a writer of scores of free-lance articles for magazines ranging from Rolling Stone to Playboy. When he began his writing career, Thompson served as a sports writer for a Florida daily and wrote under the name of Raoul Duke, as appellation he employs when discussing his antics in some of his more fictitious works. It was from this pen-name that Trudeau borrowed Duke and launched Thompson’s career as a fictional character.

Thompson has never been entrapped by this career. A few years ago when Duke and other members of the Doonesbury gang were featured on the cover of Time magazine, Thompson’s photo was featured inside and his accompanying quote which was less than favorable toward Trudeau. Apparently nothing came of it. And while what is written in the magazine is duly noted, it is dwarfed to nil (his last book was a compilation of previously published pieces and excerpts from his earlier works). Duke’s career has sky-rocketed. That’s a fact. That now he is finally out of Tehran, Doonesbury’s gigantic readership eagerly awaits his next move.

There are several possibilities which Duke may pursue. First of all, he is a friend of former Prime Minister of the China days known as ‘Sandy.’ He may want to look her up. He hasn’t seen Zonker in a while either and Reagan has a lot of appointments for a man of his talents. My personal hope is that he will return to the Washington Redskins (who are currently searching for assistant coaches) where he served as general manager (managing the correct stimuli to various team members). Whatever he does, most readers are glad to have him back. Trudeau’s character has lately come under much fire from conservative groups for his treatment of President Reagan in the presidential election series ‘Reagan’s Brain.’ Patterned after the popular PBS series hosted by Carl Rogers, Trudeau’s treatment of the then Republican candidate bordered on viciousness. When one newspaper banned the series from print, or ran it only after the election, liberal groups were quick to retaliate accusing the responsible editors of censorship. The liberal Mother Jones even features a Doonesbury character TV show on PBS. Koorin’s photo is on its cover and runs each of the offending Reagan panels inside their latest issue. With Duke back in the action now, Trudeau’s editorial character is poised to move back towards a more middle of the road stance which it traditionally assumed in the past. Duke, after all, is himself a Republican who served under the Ford administration. It will be interesting to see what role he plays in the Reagan years.

For Doonesbury readers this past week has been a reunion which, though not quite on par with some that have occurred lately, has been memorable nonetheless. Uncle Duke, one of Garry Trudeau’s most popular characters, reappeared this week after an absence of roughly 444 days. Though he was last seen in a television spoof squad, those of us who have followed Duke’s career closely and those of us who have known the non-fictional journalist Duke is based on, never doubted that he would emerge unscathed.

Uncle Duke is the writer turned diplomat who has served not only as Governor of American Samoa, but also as U.S. ambassador to China. As those who follow the comic strip well know, Duke was last seen around the time of the takeover of the American embassy in Iran. He had been sent into Iran by a large American oil company to perpetrate clandestine deeds against the Ayatollah and his cohorts. Unfortunately, after he parachuted into Tehran he was captured by militant Iranian students who planned to execute him. However, the quick-witted Duke was unimpressed by his captors and their threats, and immediately began negotiating—albeit Duke fashion and with a chair—for his release. When last reported, he had offered several hundred thousand dollars in gold which he felt his backers would be foolish to refuse to ransom to validate a man as he.

As we found out this week, Duke, no less, was writing for the American oil companies who would come up with such $$300. The Iranians, apparently tiring of the free expression of varying opinions on campus, through letters, is encouraged. Uncle Duke accepted that offer nonetheless and Duke is subsequently a free man today recovering in an Army hospital in West Germany. His ‘cause is not one of gratitude or enthusiasm as most of the other hostages, but one of annoyance, restlessness, and a lust to get on with life. For Duke’s life and his restlessness, and a lust to get on with life, there is any blood relation between Duke and Sonker. In any case, ‘Uncle’ is how Zonker addresses Duke and is the few panels where Duke’s wife has appeared Zonker has referred to her as ‘Aunt Sandy.’ The first time Doonesbury readers met Duke he was a gun-wielding, drug-imbibing journalist for Rolling Stone. His trademark cigarette holder, dark glasses, and sparse-mess of hair (as well as his cynical and self-serving philosophy) quickly endeared him to many of Trudeau’s readers. Since that time Trudeau has used Duke to comment on the Panama Canal situation, the Mayaguez incident, relations with China, Cuban anti-imperialism, oil conglomerates, homeless shelters, and the list goes on and on. That’s a wide range of interests and intrigues for any man, fictional or not.

What is most amazing though, is that Duke actually exists. Like Kilgore Trout who is an actual science fiction writer as well as a character in the novels of Kurt Vonnegut, Duke is a “real person” moonlighting in a fictional role. Not only does Thompson, the journalist, wear dark glasses, smoke a cigarette holder and have a widowed Sandy; he also lives in Aspen, Colo., (as does Duke), ingests mind-altering drugs on a regular basis, and shares Duke’s fondness for drinking, betting, and shooting loud firearms. Thompson is the author of three books (the most famous of which is the counter-culture classic Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas), and a writer of scores of free-lance articles for magazines ranging from Rolling Stone to Playboy. When he began his writing career, Thompson served as a sports writer for a Florida daily and wrote under the name of Raoul Duke, as appellation he employs when discussing his antics in some of his more fictitious works. It was from this pen-name that Trudeau borrowed Duke and launched Thompson’s career as a fictional character.

Thompson has never been entrapped by this career. A few years ago when Duke and other members of the Doonesbury gang were featured on the cover of Time magazine, Thompson’s photo was featured inside and his accompanying quote which was less than favorable toward Trudeau. Apparently nothing came of it. And while what is written in the magazine is duly noted, it is dwarfed to nil (his last book was a compilation of previously published pieces and excerpts from his earlier works). Duke’s career has sky-rocketed. That’s a fact. That now he is finally out of Tehran, Doonesbury’s gigantic readership eagerly awaits his next move.

There are several possibilities which Duke may pursue. First of all, he is a friend of former Prime Minister of the China days known as ‘Sandy.’ He may want to look her up. He hasn’t seen Zonker in a while either and Reagan has a lot of appointments for a man of his talents. My personal hope is that he will return to the Washington Redskins (who are currently searching for assistant coaches) where he served as general manager (managing the correct stimuli to various team members). Whatever he does, most readers are glad to have him back. Trudeau’s character has lately come under much fire from conservative groups for his treatment of President Reagan in the presidential election series ‘Reagan’s Brain.’ Patterned after the popular PBS series hosted by Carl Rogers, Trudeau’s treatment of the then Republican candidate bordered on viciousness. When one newspaper banned the series from print, or ran it only after the election, liberal groups were quick to retaliate accusing the responsible editors of censorship. The liberal Mother Jones even features a Doonesbury character TV show on PBS. Koorin’s photo is on its cover and runs each of the offending Reagan panels inside their latest issue. With Duke back in the action now, Trudeau’s editorial character is poised to move back towards a more middle of the road stance which it traditionally assumed in the past. Duke, after all, is himself a Republican who served under the Ford administration. It will be interesting to see what role he plays in the Reagan years.
Springsteen concert energizes audience

O nly discuss the performance as a singular entertainment event—a wrenching, exhilarating three-hour extravaganza. Rather, one can only discuss the performance as a singular entertainment event—a wrenching, exhilarating three-hour extravaganza.

Two years ago, when Springsteen last played in the ACC, he added Notre Dame to his hometown. Those who attended the concert learned what Jerseyites had known for years. The concert was the finest rock show produced in the ACC. That three-hour extravaganza of non-stop vitality and drama displayed the possibilities of the rock'n'roll format at its finest, finding those of us ignorant of Bruce's magic, flat on our feet, delightfully stunned.

As a result of Springsteen's triumph here in 1978, high expectations surrounded his return this year. Without question, Monday night's concert more than fulfilled those expectations.

In 1978, Springsteen concentrated on his older, more somber material from Born to Run and Darkness on the Edge of Town as well as his earlier releases, turning some of the lackluster studio offerings into vicious, visceral, passionate,Rolling Stone-style rock'n'roll. During the long road trips of the last two years, Springsteen has polished those edges into a confident entertainer with a sparkly unrehearsed today.

Live, Springsteen transcends his unsung studio blandness and embalms his music with an unbridled stage personality, a superlative back-up group, and a rapport with ecstatic fans that seems to energize and uplift the concert experience in a sort of cathartic revivification.

As a result, even the unfamiliar new compositions from The River flowed easily between band and audience. Even the longer, cumbersome ballads like "Independence Day," and "Point Blank" evolved enthusiastically—towards the E Street Band's penchant for playing off each other tightly as a cohesive unit, and to Springsteen's indomitably emotive stage personality.

Spanning over four hours, the concert contained too many musical highlights to properly list them all. Unlike other current groups, Springsteen did not devote the first set exclusively as a promotional tool for The River, but broke up the concert with a series of basic beat "frat rock" songs. Singularly, these tunes seem simplistic and even silly, but when presented so splendidly, one can't help but be drawn in.

When Bruce joined frenzied admirers on the floor and Clarence Clemmons funked out on saxophone. Springsteen said: "The best song the band has ever done..." After a deserved break, the band broke into a series of basic beat "frat rock" songs. These tunes were simple but well-crafted, with a sense of exhilaration.

When Bruce joined frenzied admirers on the floor and Clarence Clemmons funked out on saxophone.

After a deserved break, the band broke into a series of basic beat "frat rock" songs. These tunes were simple but well-crafted, with a sense of exhilaration.

"Rosalita," smartly left for the end of the concert, displayed the E Street Band's ability to turn a standard hit into a musical celebration instead of performing the song straight, complete with the customary audience participation, each member took an opportunity for a quick solo, and came together after some surprising rhythm variations, with the result a triumphant rock'n'roll image resolution.

"Rosalita," smartly left for the end of the concert, displayed the E Street Band's ability to turn a standard hit into a musical celebration instead of performing the song straight, complete with the customary audience participation, each member took an opportunity for a quick solo, and came together after some surprising rhythm variations, with the result a triumphant rock'n'roll image resolution.

Obviously, Bruce Springsteen has reached the crest of his career. The question is: How long can he maintain his dominance in the popular music industry? When will the cresting wave come crashing down upon the shore?

Concert performances being his forte, a live album seems to be the logical next move in Springsteen's successful career. Such a record would place him without peer in the entertainment world. After all, he could retire and live comfortably in Jersey for the rest of his days. However, after seeing the creative energy manifested inside the man on stage, it seems unlikely that we would ever leave him contented.

Thank God!

Tim "Scoop" Sullivan

Because of space limitations, Tim Neeley's weekly trivia quiz does not appear today. It will return to the Features page Thursday, Feb. 5, in a slightly revised format.

(photos by John Macor)
For most everyone who occupied the ACC Monday night, the show was enough.

But few realized the effort Springsteen put into the show when he wasn’t on stage.

Before the concert, Bruce was a picture of professionalism. When he and the band entered the ACC around 6 p.m. Monday evening, they dropped their coats in the dressing rooms and headed straight for the stage.

Excerpt Bruce

As the band broke into “Hungry Heart,” Springsteen sat at the sound board at the bottom of section 9 and set the sound levels for every microphone, instrument and speaker. And then, with his sound technician dutifully in tow, the Boss spent a half hour walking around the arena meticulously listening to the acoustics.

Springsteen circled the ACC twice, concentrating on the sound in the bleachers during the first lap and the lower padded seats on the second circuit. Making sure that everyone who had a ticket heard the first set, Bruce sat in the second last row of the backstage bleachers for five minutes, constantly making mental notes on what he wanted to adjust before the show.

Content with his survey of the upper arena, Springsteen circled the back of the floor seats before he walked down the middle aisle toward the stage. Reaching his destination, he sat down in the first row - center seat of section C. The sound had to be perfect everywhere.

As he circled the ACC listening to his hit song for the better part of 30 minutes, his face was taut. None of the excited, eager glances that were to be his trademark in barely three hours. One sensed that even when he was looking at you he wasn’t; this was business and the quality of his product demanded the utmost attention.

One more trip to the sound board to make the changes he had noted and Bruce was finally ready to go. He mounted the stage (from the front row not the steps), donned his guitar and ripped into “Hungry Heart.” The band also worked on “Prove It All Night,” with frequent stops and exhortations from their Boss to make the musical transitions neater. A bit of “Promised Land” and Roy Bittan’s “Backstreets” piano solo had the band back in gear after three plane flights from Ottawa, Canada and a night in South Bend.

But then it was time to create the night’s show, with a few special frills for the occasion. Bruce gave the band a quick reminder of “Louie, Louie,” to refresh their memories along with a dose of “Double Shot of My Baby’s Love.” Finally admitting to the E Streeters that “if you don’t know the words, fake it!”

In an interview following the Darkness tour of 1978, drummer Max Weinberg had been asked to name some special shows he had played with Bruce. Among the ten or so concerts Weinberg recalled, he said “Notre Dame — that was great. It ended up with a food fight onstage with Bruce. Among the ten or so concerts Weinberg recited, he said “Notre Dame — that was great. It ended up with a food fight onstage with Bruce.” The band also worked on “Prove It All Night,” with frequent stops and exhortations from their Boss to make the musical transitions neater. A bit of “Promised Land” and Roy Bittan’s “Backstreets” piano solo had the band back in gear after three plane flights from Ottawa, Canada and a night in South Bend.

Content with his survey of the upper arena, Springsteen circled the back of the floor seats before he walked down the middle aisle toward the stage. Reaching his destination, he sat down in the first row - center seat of section C. The sound had to be perfect everywhere.

As he circled the ACC listening to his hit song for the better part of 30 minutes, his face was taut. None of the excited, eager glances that were to be his trademark in barely three hours. One sensed that even when he was looking at you he wasn’t; this was business and the quality of his product demanded the utmost attention.

One more trip to the sound board to make the changes he had noted and Bruce was finally ready to go. He mounted the stage (from the front row not the steps), donned his guitar and ripped into “Hungry Heart.” The band also worked on “Prove It All Night,” with frequent stops and exhortations from their Boss to make the musical transitions neater. A bit of “Promised Land” and Roy Bittan’s “Backstreets” piano solo had the band back in gear after three plane flights from Ottawa, Canada and a night in South Bend.

But then it was time to create the night’s show, with a few special frills for the occasion. Bruce gave the band a quick reminder of “Louie, Louie,” to refresh their memories along with a dose of “Double Shot of My Baby’s Love.” Finally admitting to the E Streeters that “if you don’t know the words, fake it!”

In an interview following the Darkness tour of 1978, drummer Max Weinberg had been asked to name some special shows he had played with Bruce. Among the ten or so concerts Weinberg recalled, he said “Notre Dame — that was great. It ended up with a food fight onstage with Bruce. Among the ten or so concerts Weinberg recited, he said “Notre Dame — that was great. It ended up with a food fight onstage with Bruce.”

The college Bruce and the E Street band played during that 1978 tour, Notre Dame brought back memories to the band. “Oh, we like to pull out some of those old frat rock songs,” guitarist “Miami Steve” Van Zandt told the E Streeters that “if you don’t know the words, fake it!”

“You never know.”

Before exiting the stage for dinner, Springsteen also paced the band through “Soldier’s Joy” (which was played during the first set) and employed older “Lulu” (The Kinks), “I’ve Had It” (The Bell Notes) and “The Letter” (The Box Tops).

Yet all that preparation still wasn’t enough for Bruce Springsteen, the perfectionist — the same perfectionist who held up production of his last two albums for four months while they were just right.

Most everyone in the ACC assumed that Springsteen took an extended intermission to rest up after the first blustering night. Not so.

Not comforting to the band’s performance during practice, Bruce corralled the E Streeters into his dressing room and taught them the words to “Double Shot of My Baby’s Love.” There was going to be no faking it tonight. This was “the only place in the known universe” that they would ever play the song, and Bruce wanted to make sure it was done right.

Bruce’s ACC dressing quarters were all business too. The room in the lower concourse of the ACC could have been easily mistaken for an athletic lockerroom. The most visible piece of furniture in the room, besides a leather sofa along the right wall, was a padded table along the lower concourse of the ACC could have been easily mistaken for an athletic lockerroom. The most visible piece of furniture in the room, besides a leather sofa along the right wall, was a padded table among the roadies. We even played ‘Louie, Louie’ and Double Shot of My Baby’s Love.”

The neighboring dressing room for the rest of the band stocked the same beverages, along with a garbage can full of Heineken and a few assorted fifths for mixed drinks. But no one in the band touched anything but the juices, at least until after the show.

Springsteen spent over an hour recovering backstage after his guitar had silenced from the last strains of “Devil in the Blue Dress.” But when he opened his dressing room door at 2 a.m. and found some 25 people waiting for autographs, exhaustion disappeared and a smile crept across his face. He made sure every last person in the ACC and waiting at his bus in back got their autograph, their handshake and their word from the Boss.

He smiled as he turned and walked into the bus. His job was complete.
Campus

Molarity

"I've got a thimblin' 12 2, mutability but that's no reason to pick on me. Don't give a damn about designer jeans, down caviar, or baked beans!"

NO "Gator on my shirt? No gack! On my side way by a cactus. How a chey will do? Near owned a longene, never owned a skirt. Get another thing small, the old sue bleak!"

Never rocked a diamond, never iced a gent. Living how don't change no rent. Don't strike on clothes, no designated jock. I hear tall feet cause they cover my looks!"

The Daily Crossword

Across
1. Isle of... 12. Wide-mouthed... 21. Kit... 26. Grammatically... 31. Class... 36. Bowling... 43. Common talk... 44. Depressed.. 45. Drudge... 48. Tidal...

Down
1. Impaled... 2. In song... 3. Greek... 4. Certain... 5. Substituting... 6. Inspired... 7. Potter's... 8. Illuminated... 9. World...

Yesterday's Puzzle Solved:

The Observer

Thursday, January 29, 1981 — page 8

MARDI GRAS
HALL BOOTH CHAIRMAN

MANDATORY MEETING!

7.30 on Thursday, Jan. 29th

LaFortune Little Theater at Please be on time. Bring pencil and paper.

You are cordially invited to attend a talk by Peter D. Ehrenhaft, Esq. at 12:15 p.m. on Friday, Jan. 30 in room 101 of the Notre Dame Law School. Mr. Ehrenhaft's talk is entitled "Judicialization of Trade Law." Mr. Ehrenhaft has served as the Department Assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury and has also participated in the preparation of the Frien Report to the United States Supreme Court.

He is presently a partner with the Washington office of Hughes, Hubbard and Reed.

All are welcome.

Michael Molinelli

Peanuts®

The sea is filled with many wonderful creatures.
If they aren't careful, however, they can end up on the bottom of the sea with the other wonderful creatures.

Which may not be as wonderful.

Charles Schulz

...Grapplers

continued from page 12

which is equal to a wrestler losing by being pinned. (Currently, the Irish have vacancies in the 190-pound and heavyweight divisions.)

"In tournaments we won't be penalized for forfeits or for wrestling people who are mismatched in weight. For instance, we clubbed Northwestern this year as we won the matches, but lost the meet on forfeits. If three or four of our people win individual titles on Saturday, though, we can win the entire tournament."

Only Mother Nature holds the trump card over Lady Luck now as Bruns hopes to have all his wrestlers in the running come Sunday as some have been bitten by the flu bug.

Noonan to appear

Feb. 1

A guitar and lute recital featuring guest artist Jeffrey Noonan will be presented Sunday, Feb. 1 at 3 p.m. in Moreau Hall's Little Theatre. The recital is open to the public without charge.

Included in Noonan's recital will be works by Nicolas Valay, Alexander Piccini, Gregory Hurvet, Domingo Gimenez, Federico Moreno-Torroba and Johann Sebastian Bach.

Noonan has appeared in a variety of ensembles in the northeast and midwest and performs on the classical guitar and Renaissance lute. His solo appearances include recitals at Hart College in Connecticut, Boston University, Indiana University at Fort Wayne, the University of Notre Dame and Saint Mary's College.

With degrees from the University of Notre Dame and Hart College of Music at the University of Hartford, Noonan has served on the music faculties of Indiana University at Fort Wayne, Andrews University and Bethel College and was a member of the Saint Mary's music department for three years.

...Grapplers
Armi helps ND fencers

Due to a technical error the following story was improperly produced in Tuesday’s issue of The Observer. It is being run in its correct form today.

By JIM LEOUS
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame fencing team, now 4-0, seems to be on its way toward another NCAA championship berth. One of the reasons for Notre Dame’s continued success is sabre captain Greg Armi. In his three years on the Irish squad, Greg has contributed much more to the team than his amazing 72-23 record shows.

Coach Mike DeCicco describes Armi as “a natural leader who works hard and sets a good example for the rest of the team.” DeCicco is particularly proud of Armi’s work with the novice fencer’s program. Four nights a week for the past two years, Armi has worked with students who would like to try fencing, but have never fenced before.

Armi commented on the importance of the novice program. “If they (the novices) don’t stay, at least they’ll know something about fencing. If they do stay, they might not be All-Americans, but they will become very team-oriented. I like it when everyone helps each other out. The novice program really keeps the team going.”

Lack of competition is the only problem Coach DeCicco feels Armi might face this year. “For three years Greg has had Mike Sullivan and Chris Lyons to push. Now he needs someone to push him. Greg possesses great skill, and given the proper training and strong competition, he should be ready for the National Championships in March.”

Armi wasn’t always a fencer. Until his sophomore year in high school, he was a boxer. He started fencing with the foil, but as a senior picked up the sabre. He describes fencing, especially with the sabre, as a sport that requires thought and strategy, as well as agility.

“Fencing is a visual sport,” says Armi. “You must set up an action and observe your opponent, keeping in mind that if you hesitate, your opponent can make a counter-attack. The best fencers on the team think before they move.”

When asked to size up the team, Armi replies. “This year’s team has much more depth and is much quicker than last year’s.”

Coach DeCicco feels that with sabre captain Greg Armi’s leadership, the Notre Dame fencing team could be well on its way to another national championship.
NOTRE DAME STUDENT UNION
SPRING BREAK IN DAYTONA BEACH

$207
4 PER ROOM
(2 Double Beds)

$195
6 PER ROOM
(3 Double Beds)

MARCH 13 - 22, 1981

TRIP INCLUDES
• Round trip motor coach transportation on first class charter coaches leaving the campus Friday evening March 13 and traveling straight through with plenty of partying to Daytona Beach, arriving the following day. The return trip departs the following Sat. in the afternoon, and arrives back on campus the next day.
• A full seven nights accommodations at the Plaza Hotel of Daytona Beach, Florida.
• A great time in Daytona with special parties and activities.
• Optional trip to Disney World available.
• All taxes and gratuities.

THE HOTEL
The Plaza Hotel is the place to be in Daytona. It is right in the middle of everything that's happening. It is a large first class hotel located right on the beach only a couple thousand feet from the boardwalk. The hotel has a large pool, pool bar, party deck, basketball court, tennis court, coffee shop, and four of the wildest drinking establishments on the strip. You will love it.

THE BUSES
While on the buses to and from Daytona, everyone should have a great time. The buses are nothing but the best modern coaches with full washroom facilities and whenever possible, FM-AM stereo's and card table areas. Food stops will be made along the way. You can also bring along whatever you want (within reason).

SIGN UP NOW AT THE TICKET OFFICE IN THE LA FORTUNE BUILDING
8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
MON.-FRI. OR CALL 283-3031
(after five 283-6283)
Sports Briefs
By The Observer and The Associated Press

Crew club will hold an organizational meeting today at 7:30 p.m. in the Lafayette Ballroom. Men and women interested in joining for the spring should attend.

The Ski Club of Indiana University is sponsoring a skiing trip Feb. 27-March 1 (Fri.-Sun.) at Schuss Mountain and Crystal Mountain in Northern Michigan. The package includes two nights lodging at the Traverse City Days Inn and lift tickets for Saturday and Sunday. There will be a meeting Feb. 5 at 3:30 p.m. in the small theater at Lafayette. Non-members are welcome. For more information, call David Nagy at 259-1378.

Racquetball Pairings

This week's racquetball tournament will feature two matches on each of its three courts. The first round begins at 8 a.m. on Friday. Mat inscriptions may be picked up any time during the following Tuesday. Saturday will see the first round of competition: any participant who has a bye in the first round will advance. The second round will be held on Sunday. The following pairs received byes in the first round of competition:

MEN'S
Phillips (1575) v. Muehl 1570; Seuton (346) v. Schmitz (253); Blank (252) v. McCowan (257); H. Rhoads (242) v. Meier (237)

WOMEN'S
Whitehall (2223) v. (641); H. Rhoads 867; H. Rhoads 857; M. Slowik (236) v. (645); Slowik (236) v. Meier (237)

The men's and women's doubles racquetball tournament will begin Friday night and run through Saturday.

Family affair

Valdiserri leads women fencers

By DONNA WITZLEBEN
Sports Writer

"If I shoot for anything I like to go all the way. And that's not just in fencing -- that's in everything," states Susan Valdiserri, who has three national championships as the mark on national fencing. "When you fence you should use your aggressiveness and strength. You have to work on your techniques. When you are smart your opponent then that becomes fencing. You are still using your physical ability, but you are now using your mental ability as well," says Susan.

Susan's father, Roger Valdiserri, is the Sports Information Director and Assistant Athletic Director at Notre Dame. "My father would always encourage my brothers and sister and me no matter what we wanted to do. It is what we want the most for us all of the way."

As for her fencing in Susan says, "I am going to give fencing on the college level my all. I'd see what happens. It is in point that I could shock the Olympics."

"I take this seriously and work hard and I'm always ready to tell me when I was younger. We will get you to go to the Olympics. But now fencing is won from a more popular and the competition is tougher."

"I might shoot for the Olympics, but if I didn't make it I would not be disappointed. That's all I mean that I didn't start early enough and was not as dedicated as I should have been."

Susan also speaks very highly of Coach Mike Decicco, who has won three national championships as the men's coach at Notre Dame. "Anybody who has ever known Coach has thought highly of him. I've known him since I was nine years old, but I never appreciated how helpful and supportive. Sometimes I can't afford it, but you always pay for lessons and he will always give me a lesson. He would do anything for me."

"He also helped my family through the very difficult times. Coach DeCicco is a very compassionate and great guy," emphasizes Susan.

DeCicco also thinks very highly of his young fencer. "She started with me as a young lady who came to watch her sister taking fencing lessons. She started fencing two years before she ever came to Notre Dame. She has great, great athleticism and she is a great sporty lady. "She is very bright, and she listens and takes instructions exceptionally well. I think that is the big reason why she, as a sophomore, has made such great strides in fencing. She has received the support and the respect of all the ladies, as they have made her their captain."

Susan is a team leader in every sense of the word. The most important thing is that she is so smart. In fact I have to be on my toes for fear that I might tell her something on Tuesday and she'll do it the next day totally oppositely on Thursday and she will think that I am a dork."

"Susan has had great success so far and hopefully," concludes DeCicco, "as she goes on from her senior and leaves us as a fencing goer, she will make her mark on national fencing."
The Notre Dame women's basketball team nudged Angelic Athletic Center last night and came away with a 59-44 victory over Saint Mary's. See related story below.

59-44

Matvey leads Irish to victory over Belles

By DAVE WILSON

Shari Matvey poured in 25 points in leading Notre Dame to a convincing 59-44 basketball victory last night over Saint Mary's in Angelic Athletic Facility. The win enabled the Irish to boost their undefeated record against the Belles to nine wins without a loss. Saint Mary's dropped to 6-6 on the season while Notre Dame advanced to 9-0.

"We played a terrific defensive game," said Notre Dame coach Mary Distanislao. "Of course, Shari Matvey had another outstanding performance."

The game was much closer than the final score might suggest. Notre Dame opened up an 18-8 lead at the quarter, but Saint Mary's countered with an impressive 25-0 run to take the game tied at twenty apiece late in the first half. The Irish held a slim 25-24 edge at halftime.

In the second half, Saint Mary's was held to just three points in 10 minutes at Notre Dame once again built up a 10-point lead, 37-27. The Irish then coasted to victory, backed by Matvey's sharpshooting and the team's strong defense.

For the Belles, Coach Jerry Dallesio was unusually optimistic despite the loss.

"Our game plan was to keep it close going into the second half," he observed, "and that's exactly what we did."

"We had a few problems with turnovers, and we couldn't stop Matvey, but I'm very satisfied with the performance of my team tonight. We learn a lot from games such as these."

Saint Mary's garnered 17 points and another outstanding game from guard Anne Armstrong. Lisa Schart came off the bench to throw in 13 for the Belles as well.

The Irish and Matvey were backed by four players with eight points apiece: Theresa Mufflin, Molly Ryan, Missey Conboy, and Tricia McManus.

The Belles will travel to Hanover College for a tournament this weekend in hopes of ending a four-game losing streak, while the Irish will remain at home to face the Gamecocks of South Carolina on Saturday.

Thursday, January 29, 1981 — page 12

Wrestlers in good shape for Scranton tourney

By LOUIE SOMOGYI

Lady Luck has finally smiled on the Notre Dame wrestling team as it heads this week to the University of Scranton for the National Catholic Invitational Tournament with optimism after its most impressive outing in last Saturday's three match sweep of Concordia, North Park, and Aurora.

"Our people are pretty happy," says first year coach Brother Joseph Bruno. "After all the injuries, weight vacances, and disappointing losses we've had, we've had to rely on inexperienced wrestlers. But they've just been doing so well. And now I really feel that we are coming together as a team."

The Irish (6-7) have indeed laid the burden for success on freshmen and sophomores. Rookie Joe Agostino (7-2) and sophomore Doug Skinner (10-1) will vie for the 142-pound class title at Saturday's meet.

Two other freshmen, Karl Dahlhauser (3-3) and Mike Schmitt (2-4-2) will wrestle at 126 pounds, trying to win a second individual title in a different weight class. Last year Fisher won the Invitational's 118-pound crown.

Junior Curt Rood (8-9-1) and John Campagna (14-5-1) will go at the 154 and 150 weight classes, respectively. Both Rood and Campagna hold impressive six match winning streaks.

"Any of our wrestlers have a chance to win a title tomorrow," says Bruno.

"John Carroll and Notre Dame are traditionally the top teams in the Catholic Invitational," adds Bruno. "They're the rest are of average strength."

(Two Irish won the tournament in 1978 and placed third the last two years.)

"The rest are of average strength.""wrestling meets we lose six points for a forfeit, we've had to rely on inexperienced wrestlers. But they've just been doing so well. And now I really feel that we are coming together as a team."

The Irish and Matvey were backed by four players with eight points apiece: Theresa Mufflin, Molly Ryan, Missey Conboy, and Tricia McManus.

The Belles will travel to Hanover College for a tournament this weekend in hopes of ending a four-game losing streak, while the Irish will remain at home to face the Gamecocks of South Carolina on Saturday.

"You better believe it."

See GRAPPLERS, page 8