House vote approves production of first twenty-one MX missiles

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The hotly debated MX missile program overcame another challenge yesterday when the House voted 217-208 to approve $3.1 billion to produce the first 21 of the intercontinental nuclear weapons.

After a four-hour debate in which MX advocates said the Reagan administration has made sincere efforts in arms control and opponents remained deeply skeptical, members defeated an amendment by Rep. Joseph P. Addabbo, D-N.Y., to strip the production money from a $3.24 trillion defense nuclear wall.

The vote was the closest call that the program has had this year in the House of Representatives. But it approved production by a 13-vote margin in a military authorization bill in July and a House vote. Members had approved the program will continue at full scale.

The MX debate, Rep. Albert Gore, D-Tenn., a leader of moderate Democrats who have been key players in negotiations with the administration, ticked off 15 concessions he said the White House made in its arms-control posture in return for support for the MX.

"The president for so far has lived up to this end of the unbalanced bargain, and the Congress must live up to its end," Gore said.

But opponents reiterated their view that the giant, 10-warhead missiles are dangerous to the nuclear balance and that the nation's treasury could not afford the ultimate $27.5 billion cost for 100 MX "Peacekeepers."

Addabbo wanted to strip $438.7 million in advance procurement items for the B-1 from the bill and thus prevent the Air Force from being able to commit itself to bomber purchases several years in advance.

Addabbo, chairman of the House defense appropriations committee, said the B-1B was not ready for advance procurement because the first plane will not fly for a year and operational testing will not be completed until after that.

By approving multi-year spending, he argued, "Congress will be locked into this program and will lose fiscal control" over it.

But Rep. Jack Edwards, R-Ala., and other advocates replied that a Reagan administration pledge to hold the total cost of the 100-plane B-1B program to $20.5 billion in 1981 dollars was contingent on approval of the multi-year feature.

"If you give them that excuse to get out of under that blanket, I can't tell you how much the B-1 would cost," Edwards said.

Accidents in invasion cause U.S. casualties

BRIDGETOWN, Barbados — The Red Cross negotiated with U.S. forces in Grenada yesterday on how to evacuate 50 wounded and ill Cuban prisoners, while hundreds of Marines stormed a nearby island in a battlefield hunt for resisters.

The Pentagon said the Marines found only a few local residents on the Grenadine island of Carriacou, 20 miles north of Grenada, and boarded the prisoners after the U.S. military command to go into Grenada. She said the Red Cross hoped to fly 35 wounded and 15 ill Cuban prisoners home today.

"We are marrying the Russians. We either live with them or die with them — in an atmosphere," she said. "The whole world is watching you."

Pentagon spokesman said several Army Rangers were killed and several others wounded when two U.S. helicopters collided and four Navy Seals in a commando unit drowned in a pre-invasion accident.

The Pentagon says 19 U.S. ser-vemen have been killed, 86 wounded and one missing since the invasion. It has listed about 100 Cuban casualties without specifying dead and wounded.

Catherine Peduzzi, a Red Cross representative, said a Swissair jet landed in the Red Cross was waiting for Borries for clearance from the U.S. military command to go into Grenada. She said the Red Cross helped to fly 55 wounded and 15 ill Cuban prisoners home today.

However, a high-ranking U.S. military officer interviewed on the condition that he not be identified by name, said the military command had denied the Red Cross request instead, he said, the command wants the Swiss jet to wait in Barbados and board the prisoners after the military ferries the Cubans in.

Neither the officer nor Peduzzi knew when the estimated 600 Cuban prisoners would depart Grenada.

Peduzzi said four Red Cross officers were in Grenada Tuesday negotiating the logistics with American commanders. She said the Red Cross also wanted to arrange for the removal of Cuban dead.

‘Picture hunt’ discussed at HPC

By JANE KRAVCIK

News Staff

Details for the first annual crazy picture hunt were given last night at the Hall Presidents’ Council meeting at Paquessa Hall.

According to Neil King, photographer and organizer of the event, each hall section will be allowed to enter one picture of its residents looking as crazy as possible.

The pictures will then be posted in Lafortune Student Center. According to King, "The winner will be decided by a penny vote, with the proceeds going to United Way. The winning picture will be printed in The Observer."
In Brief

Cars parked in C1 or D1 must be moved by 8:30 a.m. tomorrow; portable lighting and television platforms may be installed, said Glenn Terry, director of security, yesterday. Areas south of these lots will be available for student parking until 8:30 a.m. Saturday. Students with D1 or C1 parking decals may park in other south lots during the weekend. The change in the time of the Pittsburgh game (from 1:30 to 4:35 p.m.) has made other this and other changes necessary at the University. The South Dining Hall will remain open until 8:30 p.m., a departure from the usual 7 p.m. closing hour. — The Observer

The Saint Mary's Board of Regents approved a resolution which names the firm of Sheer, Mahre, Sather, Quanbeck as the architects for the renovation of the South Dining Hall. The board also approved a $55,000 housing loan at a 3 percent interest rate to finance renovations in Holy Cross College and St. Mary's Hall. The board allocated the money to replace the showers that are in poor condition in Holy Cross and to install emergency lighting in the hall. Storm windows will be installed in Leman's with the money. Replacing both elevators in Leman is also being considered. The campus construction began last summer in order to meet fire and safety regulations in the dorms. The minutes of the regents meeting will not be available for approximately two weeks. — The Observer

Numbers vs. values

"No, Notre Dame, as a Catholic university, must be all of this, and our concern touches the moral as well as intellectual dimension of all of the questions it asks itself and its students..." — Father Theodore Hesburgh, University president

This quote, from the economics department brochure, highlights the department's philosophy since it was restructured several years ago under chairman Charles E. Wilber.

"Most economics departments pride themselves on being value-neutral or pure scientists. We feel this is impossible. The value issues must be up front. This is particularly appropriate at a Catholic university, which places an emphasis on social justice," said Wilber, who is serving the last year of his third term as chairman.

This emphasis on values becomes more unique, and more interesting, in light of the increasing popularity of statistic-based econometrics among economics departments across the nation.

Some argue there are problems in applying value-oriented theories, particularly regarding the method of integrating social justice into a viable economic theory.

The issue of social justice is an implicit one because of the very nature of statistics may appear value-free, there are value assumptions in data and the way it is interpreted. Thus and sometimes one ignores this reality, but they raise the valid and are set unanswerable questions. How does one integrate freedom, wealth, and life satisfaction into economic theory?

Self-esteem and life-satisfaction are freedom goals that an economy should seek to accomplish according to Wilber and Professor Kenneth Jarrow. An economy should provide the majority of citizens with the opportunity of self fulfillment within the cultural framework. It should also attempt to provide necessary criteria for survival, in terms of shelter and material goods.

Finally, the masses should enjoy basic human rights. It is an easy question to answer, and a policy maker will encounter difficulties convincing people to employ concepts not yet incorporated into a tried and popular framework.

Yet, the idea of employing value-based concepts is a good one and one that merits consideration by an expanding intellectual expertise. Notre Dame, as a Catholic institution, should continue to ignore criticisms of value-based economics and become a vanguard of these goals. — AP

This would be beneficial in two ways for the department and the University. In accordance with the resources available to it, the department strained its main focus to three areas. The first of these is development economics. This area is the foundation of the department's social justice orientation and is also an area that is not usually emphasized by economic departments. This leads to a unique sense of attraction to the department.

It is a question of the humanistic orientation of economics. Is it possible to ignore morals while propagating a policy that affects millions of people, both domestically and abroad? One cannot deny the reality of ten million unemployed people and the social upheaval and degradation of quality of life they experience. When one ranks low inflation over quality of life for ten million people, what are the moral implications? Where should the emphasis be?

Hence, the economy's role be to promote an atmosphere encouraging business activity or to provide for the welfare of all citizens? This is not a question of capitalism or socialism, but a question of justice.

While some argue that anyone who wants to can 'make money' in the United States, the fact remains that millions of people are in the lowest economic sector of society have far less control over their welfare than do those in the highest sector. In any society, the facts do not take an down that far, and provisions should be made to account for this imbalance.

These are challenging questions especially appropriate at Notre Dame because of their Christian aspect. The University's concern touches the moral as well as intellectual dimensions of all the questions it asks itself and its students.

The orientation of the department challenges the student to search for values behind the theories; it also challenges the 'pure scientists' and policy makers to evaluate the implications of their actions and policies.

Fest's first annual Fall Festival moves into its third day today with a full slate of events, in addition to a week-long banner contest and traditional homecoming activities scheduled for the week's close. Today is 'Dress for Success Day,' and includes a 3-mile Fun Run and a combined Glee Club-Shenanigans concert.

The new festival format is intended to enhance homecoming, according to co-chairwomen Tina Persson and Lisa Pletcher. "The festival is 'totally different' from last year's homecoming," added Persson. "We are more like a traditional festival now than we were last year," Persson explained. "We would like to get students more excited this week than in years past."

Tomorrow's 'Doner Day,' will consist of a tug-of-war competition and an Irish dinner sponsored by the dining halls. The 'Tug O'War Challenge' pits teams of ten organized by dorm presidents and section leaders against teams from other dorms and residence halls. The 'Tug O'War Challenge' will be held at 8:00 p.m. in the South Dining Hall tomorrow night. The 'Irish Dinner' sponsored by the University president will take place in the South Dining Hall at 8:30 p.m.

Saturday afternoon's parade prior to the homecoming game with Pittsburgh will feature fireworks at 8:00 and a 9:00 bonfire at White Field.

A biographical film about the Protestant theologian and his experiences in a concentration camp during World War II, will be shown in the Center for Social Concerns this evening, Nov. 8 at 7:30 p.m. and is sponsored by Pax Christi.

A Veterans Day Mass celebrated by Father Theodore Hesburgh, University president at Sacred Heart Church will conclude the "Fortnight of Education." The Mass will be at 5 p.m. and all of the "peace-oriented" groups will participate, said Murphy. The officiant will feature a representative from each of the groups giving a gift symbolic of the group's activity, said Murphy.

"It is fitting on a day we honor the war dead that we talk of peace," said Murphy.

The Observer
The death toll rose and an officer in charge of identifying his comrades was depressed — before the Marines went to sleep each night, many took off their dog tags and laid them on the table next to their beds. "You tell them again and again to wear them always, but still they take them off," he said.

Also in that year of 1983 a leader of a great and powerful country on this side of the world was concerned about his country's interests in that troubled region. So he sent legions of men over to protect his country's beliefs. Other countries with similar interests followed, and outside involvement in the region escalated.

These men did not come to conquer the region, but rather to keep peace in the land. They proved this by taking a conservative, non-aggressive stance. They occupied the worst military position of an ensign led unit in recent memory. They held a position which was surrounded by enemy, mountains, and constantly vulnerable to gun fire from snipers.

The death toll rose and an officer in charge of identifying his comrades was depressed — many Marines in their sleep, until they were found and were buried. "Everything in the military is marked with your name, except dead and wounded," he said.

Furthermore, since the peacekeepers were non-combative, they could not be involved in any kind of battle. They could not dig in and secure themselves in bunkers. They were not equipped to erect roadblocks which could have made their position less vulnerable to enemy attacks. No, their only mission was to keep peace, although many wondered if finding peace would be tougher than keeping the peace that had existed before the blast.

The death toll rose — and an officer in charge of identifying the Marines was depressed — eight days after the blast many Marines were still buried in the rubble. Only two of the five stories of their headquarters had been uncovered. "If I had survived the explosion and were buried, they're now dead. Furthermore, many families won't have to face incredible civil strife, a contention that would seem to come to a close.

Reagan's signal to the world

Last week American males of draft age who had previously given scarce attention to the foreign policy of the Reagan administration began to study in earnest the intensifying involvement of U.S. military forces in the Middle East and the Caribbean.

Robert Lloyd Snyder

Then midweek

The traps and senseless bombing of the Marine compound in Beirut dominated the headlines early in the week, but it was upstaged by the sudden and unexpected American invasion of Grenada. The President even up on a peripatetic tour of the country and the importance of the presence of American military personnel in these two world trouble spots was a large segment of the public (i.e. the electorate) dream on the gravedigging in the wake of the so-called Roosevelt-Dewey debates of the 1930's. And now, for the first time since the evacuation of Saigon, American military forces are involved in an offensive capacity. The United States is fighting in a foreign land.

The specter of Vietnam still looms over this nation's affairs; in Congressional debates, the memory of that war is wielded as a knife by the President's opponents, especially in Congress. The foreign policy advice of many of these representatives, however, seems to be pejorative. Many of their foreign policy positions can be succinctly summarized in the phrase, "you can't have your cake and eat it, too".

The political-motivated and degrading evacuation of Vietnam by some of these grandstanding politicians is a disgrace and a slap in the face to persons whose lives were critically altered by that war.

Grenada is not Vietnam. Lebanon is not Vietnam. They are two separate and unique countries, and while we must apply our Vietnam experience to any future foreign policy decisions, we must also have the attitude to recognize areas of the world critical to the nation's interests. And by this, I mean we must possess a national character strong enough to protect these interests.

The situation in Lebanon is of critical importance to the future of the Middle East and ultimate world peace. Fifty factorial skirmishes in Lebanon has the potential to erupt into a greater Middle Eastern war or perhaps an alternation between the United States and the USSR. Furthermore, the attempted abduction of a nation in the de facto "backyard" of the United States is a flagrant and knowing violation of the Soviet Union of the Monroe Doctrine, and the United States has raised over Afghanistan and Poland, this country has long implicitly recognized the existence of "spheres of influence" for each superpower. The "control" of the Caribbean is undoubtedly crucial to American foreign policy, as is control of the Iran oil supply.

Why has the United States decided to invade a third rate threat to American security? It was not primarily because of concern for the safety of American students in Grenada, or because the government of Maurice Bishop was deposed in a bloody coup, or because the desire of the United States to use the marines as a protector of the Grenadian people from the "evil empire". Rather, the invasion of Grenada, and why U.S. marines are stationed as sitting ducks in Beirut, and the reason why more American boys will be sent home for a finite time is that the President believed these sacrifices necessary to protect the national interest and the future of this country.

And whether you agree with Reagan's responses to these international policy problems or not, he has succeeded in sending a message to the entire world that the United States is determined to fulfill its commitments and defend its perceived and well-known interests.

Student power?

Dear Editor:

If Fr. Theodore Hesburgh honestly stands behind his statements that students and faculty must learn that they are not powerless (The Observer, Oct. 15), then he also proves the policy he and his administration have pursued ridiculous.

There is hardly a university like Notre Dame where students are so much discouraged to believe in their own power, and in their responsibilities and ability to do so on certain issues. Trying to reach students how to influence the development of the international affairs race before ever they had the opportunity to execute their influence on university matters is like trying to make someone cook bridge before he even managed to have a meal.

If Fr. Hesburgh honestly believed that the students at Notre Dame have the insight and moral stand to have a say in such a crucial issue, then he doubtlessly would acknowledge their insight and moral stand, enabling them to be given power over decisions in their university. Notre Dame. Denying their ability and power to deal with aloof political and social issues on their own, absurdly contradicts acknowledging their ability to prevent a nuclear conflict.

I firmly believe that the students at Notre Dame should learn how to use and value their talent and in order to work against obvious wrongs on a world-wide basis. However, I believe even more firmly that the same students should be encouraged to learn how to use and value their talent and responsibility in the immediate environment of their community.

Otherwise, Fr. Hesburgh's words are just coming from a "mousy guy" or a "clinging bush."

The Notre Dame soccer team finished its home season yesterday by losing, 2-1. The Irish had already beaten Grace, 3-1, in a game played this past week, and the opposing players were obviously hoping to turn the tables in this game. They came out playing hard, while the Irish seemed sluggish for most of the first half. About 30 minutes into the game, however, the Irish began to control the tempo of the game, and generated some good scoring opportunities.

With 1:25 remaining in the first period, halfback Tonti Dolev gave Notre Dame a one-goal advantage, which the Irish held at halftime. Dolev pounded in a free kick from 25 yards out off the fingers of Grace goalkeeper Dave Innes for the score. Grace, 4-1, in preseason play this year, would help the Irish in more exciting moments.

It did not take long for Notre Dame, which competes in Division I, to score and put the game out of reach. The Irish had stopped the last Saint Mary's threat of the night. The Irish played with a shot off of a set by Mollie McLaughlin iced the game with 24, and he needs 57 receiving yards to break Gordon Jones' mark of 2,230.

The phone operator had a busy night at the Irish goal. Joe Howard for a 54 yard touchdown to give the Irish a 17-13 lead. The Panthers drove right back with a field goal and were driving towards the Irish goal. The Belles were also matched up against Notre Dame in a very workmanlike fashion. They covered every Saint Mary's shot and ran their offense as well as ever. It was 12:06 when Ann Brown finally put the Belles on the scoreboard. It never got closer than 14-14 when Mary McLaughlin iced the game with a shot off a set by Mollie Merch. It was the second in a row that the Irish offensive front. Pinkett has had some gaping holes to run through, thanks in large to the efforts of Larry Williams, Neil Maune, and a dismal 0-2 mark on CBS. Hopefully, both records will improve on Saturday.

In the Pitts of Many "experts" predicted Sefarian's "Pogue" Fazio would have to suffer through a rebuilding year at Pittsburgh this year after losing Heisman Trophy winner John Van Bussel. However, the Panthers have found more than enough talent in their ranks; they have more than enough in their ranks to make a run at the ACC. The Panthers rely on a variety of running backs, led by wide-open Joe Howard for a 54 yard touchdown to give the Irish a 17-13 lead. The passing game has finally improved for the Irish, as quarterback Steve Beuerlein has found a plethora of receivers at his disposal. Split end Joe Howard leads the youthful receiving corps in catches, 47 for 736 yards and three TD's.

Defensively, the Irish added an interceding safety, which has suffered at times this season. However, when you note that the Panthers have found more than enough talent in their ranks; they have more than enough in their ranks to make a run at the ACC. The Panthers rely on a variety of running backs, led by wide-open Joe Howard for a 54 yard touchdown to give the Irish a 17-13 lead. The Panthers drove right back with a field goal and were driving towards the Irish goal. The Belles were also matched up against Notre Dame in a very workmanlike fashion. They covered every Saint Mary's shot and ran their offense as well as ever. It was 12:06 when Ann Brown finally put the Belles on the scoreboard. It never got closer than 14-14 when Mary McLaughlin iced the game with a shot off a set by Mollie Merch. It was the second in a row that the Irish offensive front. Pinkett has had some gaping holes to run through, thanks in large to the efforts of Larry Williams, Neil Maune, and the rest of the Irish line.

The passing game has finally improved for the Irish, as quarterback Steve Beuerlein has found a plethora of receivers at his disposal. Split end Joe Howard leads the youthful receiving corps in catches, 47 for 736 yards and three TD's.
