Infonet phone system bugs many students

By TIM GIANOTTI
Staff Reporter

Student frustration over faulty telephone service has been on the rise since the installation of pushbutton phones and the Infonet networking system.

Complaints of excessive static, overlapping conversations on the same line, complete system shut down, inability to complete long distance calls, and a spattering of various other gripes have accompanied the transition to the new phone system.

Thomas Mason, vice-president of business services, said another thousand subscribe to the saviour line system so far at least a few hundred more students are to be signing up with Infonet in the near future.

The new system was installed primarily due to the AT&T breakup and the need to renovate the dated telephone system. Out of more than 10 competing bids, Infonet was selected for their "complete" package, involving a headquarters in the basement of the Memorial Library. This local centralization enables the network to handle students' calls directly and to route them in the most efficient manner, according to Humms.

Infonet, Inc. is a corporation located in Ann Arbor, Michigan. Although it is doing business in Indiana, it is still controlled as an out-of-state corporation, according to the Indiana Secretary of State's office.

Most Infonet products, however, are not in the interest of the poor, blacks and other ethnic minorities, and women, who want to see SCOTT, page 4

Law students hunger for marathon

By TOM POWERS
Staff Reporter

Notre Dame law students are training for their own kind of olympics these days, only the training camp is not an athletic field, but a dinner table.

Tonight, the law students are sponsoring a 10K (calorie) marathon at the Oak Room Cafe, where they will be expected to eat at least two plates of spaghetti from there they travel to the Huddle to eat a double dip ice cream cone, and then to the A.C.G. (Notre Dame vs. Davidson basketball game) for a large coke and another double-dip cone. Each individual contestant will then drink a full pitcher of beer at the Senior Bar, and to cap off the evening they will all eat a small pizza from Domino's.

The contest is open only to law students and, according to one of the organizers, Don Hubbard. "It is just a way for the law students to relax and release a little tension."

Hubbard says that the contestants have been training for the event by eating a lot more food than they normally do. The entire contest will cost each person about $40 for the food. The winner will be honored with a permanent trophy for his efforts.

The idea originally came from the members of the Law Student Bar association on campus. Other upcoming events that the association will sponsor are the Lion Bowl, the Derby Days Party, the Recall Election, and a beach party.

Campus Ministry's Sclaver moves to Ave Maria Press

By JOE MERCANT
Staff Reporter

Father David Sclaver, director of Campus Ministry, has been appointed editor and publisher of Ave Maria Press, Notre Dame's Catholic printing house. He succeeds Father John Bloy, who died December 2.

The announcement was made in South Bend today by Father Richard Warner, provincial superior of the Indiana Province of Holy Cross. He also announced that Frank Cunningham, present Managing Editor at the press, has been appointed General Manager.

Established in 1865 by the priests and brothers of Holy Cross, Ave Maria Press is one of the oldest Catholic publishing houses in the United States. Ave Maria operates a printing facility which serves the printing needs of the publishing division of the University of Notre Dame and Saint Mary's College, and of the Congregation of Holy Cross.

Sclaver, 41, entered the Congregation of the Holy Cross in 1963 after three years of study at Notre Dame. He made his first religious vows in 1964, graduated from Notre Dame in 1966, and was ordained there in 1971.

He worked as an assistant editor at Ave Maria during his theology studies in Washington, D.C., and at Notre Dame. He assumed his present position as Director of Campus Ministry at Notre Dame in the summer of 1981.

Cunningham is a graduate of Stetson College and holds a Master of Arts Degree from St. Michael's College in Winona, Vermont. Cunningham has extensive experience in publishing, having worked as a reporter and editor for several newspapers and magazines.

Although University officials refused to speculate on Sclaver's replacement at Campus Ministry, Father Daniel Jenky, rector of Sacred Heart Church, is viewed as the probable successor. Jenky declined comment on the matter yesterday.
He's been blasted by the media biggies, but former President Jimmy Carter showed recently that he still has a thin skin. When the student newspaper at Emory University, where Carter is vice president of the board of trustees, criticized him as a "cowardly" for not taking a stand on a local issue, Carter immediately asked for a meeting with the editor. The criticism came in an Emory Wheel editorial on construction of a roadway out to the new Carter library. An early design, which would have sent a superhighway through local neighborhoods, sparked local protests. A smaller, four-lane road is now planned. Carter told editor Fred Diamond and managing editor Martha Evans he felt "personal-type attacks" were "counterproductive" and worked against the "harmonious relationships." He says he enjoys at Emory. Carter also denied not taking a stand on the university's policy favoring a road but not a specific design. He didn't retract the editorial, but Diamond says he accepts Carter's clarification.

The University will provide free transportation to the Notre Dame/Purdue game at the Indiana Hoosier Stadium in Bloomington Sept. 8. This was announced by Director of Student Activities James McDonnell, who is in charge of arranging the transportation, at the Hall President's Council meeting last night in Whelan Hall. McDonnell then asked for the president's help in determining the number of people who would use the transportation service. "If the game is designated as a home game, the University feels compelled to provide free transportation," McDonnell said. The possibility of chartering a train is being considered, but most students will make the three hour trip by bus. Also at the meeting, Keenan Hall announced that tickets for the Keenan Hall Revue will be distributed this Sunday. The show will be on Feb. 1, 3, and 4. Jim Fege and co-chairperson of the Buchanan Winter Festival in Buchanan, Michigan, gave hall presidents information about the event. The festival will be held from Feb. 5 and will include a snow shoe relay race, cardboard box races and a Las Vegas Casino night.

America's television fixation reached an all-time high in 1983, with average daily viewing per household breaking the seven-hour mark. A. C. It was a year that featured the top-rated "M*A*S*H" finale, two record ABC miniseries, increased cable use and one commercial that rivaled a local issue. Reagan to endorse space station

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan will endorse in his State of the Union speech tonight a manned orbiting station as the cornerstone of his Nation's Future in Space, government sources said Tuesday.

The station, to be operational early in the next decade, would signal a permanent U.S. presence in space and could expand to such objectives as a manned lunar base and expeditions to Mars, said sources who asked to remain anonymous.

There was no comment from the White House on the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. However, NASA has scheduled a news briefing tomorrow on "State of the Union proposals."

White House Science Adviser George A. Keyworth said recently that the president wants to "recapaculate the vision of Apollo" and maintain U.S. leadership in space at a time when the Soviet Union is pursuning ambitious space plans.

A bold commitment to a long range program centered on a space station would be the first major space declaration by the United States since President Kennedy declared in 1961 that an American should land on the Moon before the end of that decade.

As a down payment on the 68 billion-dollar Reagan budget for space, the station is asking for about $15 million in his proposed fiscal 1985 budget, which goes to Congress Feb. 1. The sources said

Preliminary 1985 spending projections given earlier this month by White House Budget Director David Stockman show the administration wants to add 46 billion dollars over the next five years, principally for developing the station. That is a large increase for an agency whose budget has been between 60 billion dollars and $7 billion annually and which has seen some lean years since the glory days of the Apollo moon flights.

The sources said Reagan will, in his speech, ask Congress to support a station as a means of moving commercial- ly and technology in space.
Democrats and Republicans spar over cost of heating bills program

Associated Press

North Carolina Democratic government officials have proposed a $1.7 billion increase in the state's budget for the fiscal year, including a 50% increase in the state's sales tax to $1.5 billion.

The state's Republican governor has said the increase is too high and has threatened to veto it if it is not reduced.

Easy solution to car cover-up

Students who chose to leave their cars here over the holidays probably wish they hadn't.

Several students returned to find their cars either surrounded or buried by snow which University-owned plows had left as a Christmas present.

John Mouzman, director of maintenance, says the cars are "a real problem" for the snowplows, especially as well. Many fly home for break or carpool to save money, and never think equipment does not help matters any. To they hadn't.

Students have their share of complaints as well. Many fly home for break or carpool to save money, and never think twice about leaving their cars in the lots.

Many return to find their cars buried, if not damaged by piles of snow. Thought security and maintenance are both willing to help students dig out, may have more important things to do. And some officers are physically unable to shovel snow (it isn't exactly in their job description).

The easiest solution would be to set aside an area in one of the lots a few days before finals. With a little publicity, students would be more than happy to move cars rather than be plowed under.

Glenn Terry, director of security, says they've tried a similar scheme before without much success. Terry says they'd never achieve 100 percent compliance, and that estimating the number of cars and the size of the space needed would be a chore.

But it seems the idea would save the departments time, if anything. The plows would be able to clear the lots faster, security would have fewer parking lots to patrol, and nobody would have to help the students dig out after the fact.

Even if some students didn't comply, they would have no one but themselves to blame.

So let's hope the University takes some time now to settle the problem. After all, an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.

University students no middle class

An unscientific survey of a class of 38 students here offers what we have probably all long thought — Notre Dame is too middle class.

Sixty-five percent of the respondents thought that their annual family incomes placed them somewhere in the "middle class," and the rest classified themselves as "upper middle" or "rich." Of those who said they were in the middle class, only 20 percent were correct according to their self-reported incomes. Middle class, thought the respondents, lay from anywhere between $14,000 to $35,000 dollars.

If we loosely define middle class as those households whose incomes make them wealthier than the bottom 25 percent and poorer than the top 25 percent, it is soon evident that most ND students are gravely mistaken about their class.

According to the U.S. Statistical Abstract, middle class incomes range from $11,200 to $32,000, as compared to $32,000 to $65,000 for upper middle class, or $65,000 to $160,000 for rich.

We all know that students typically earn considerably lower incomes than do their parents. And we know that many work 20 or more hours per week to help pay for college. But this doesn't mean they are middle class, nor does it mean they are dependent on parental aid.

The easiest solution would be to set aside an area in one of the lots a few days before finals. With a little publicity, students would be more than happy to move cars rather than be plowed under.

Gentle Reader — Miss Manners will certainly endorse and help Gentle Reader that may distract others. (College students, unlike young pupils, may refrain from activities, such as eating, drinking or gum chewing, in class. Sleeping is even better than these annoying mannerisms. It is very rude and annoying to the teacher. The same goes for chewing peanuts for everyone in class. But this would not work yet, to remove it before entering the classroom. She acted insulted without the cooperation of the ladies. Perhaps the entire custom suddenly flown away, and then sullenly drag their handbag to the sidewalk? Whether rules that have become outmoded because their practical forces me to run to head her off. Or, worse yet, modern women will hind her to change sides at a corner, only to have her edge in the mainstream of traffic.

Dear Miss Manners — My problem lies in the general category of whether rules that have become outmoded because their practical need no longer exists should continue to be honored in the face of declining enrollment. Is it not a burden for a gentleman always to walk on the curb when escorting a lady on the sidewalk.

It is vexing to accompany today's modern woman and duck behind her change sides at a corner, only to have her edge in the same direction, mistaking thinking I plan a change in course. This forces me to run to head her off. Or, worse yet, modern women will stop conversing in mid sentence and look wildly about, as if I had stopped a day's progress, and then sullenly drag their handbag to the other side as if were filled with cement. Changing sides is a complicated maneuver, made more difficult without the cooperation of the ladies. Perhaps the entire custom should be discontinued.

Gentle Reader — Perhaps. But let us hear no more about abandoning courteous simply because there is no practical need for them. That would include most of the civilized refinements and kindnesses considered part of our range of basic courtesies.

Miss Manners — Problem Miss Manners keeps trying to explain, is folk custom. When it changes, it generally does so because a certain gesture has fallen into disuse to the extent that most people neither practice nor understand it.

The custom of the gentlemen walking on the outside may, indeed be well on its way to oblivion. Miss Manners can understand your reluctance to continue practicing it with ladies who are only bewildered by it. But it is not gone altogether. To the many of us who are familiar with it, it remains a charming little courtesy, indeed impractical, but all the more valuable because it is associated with a disappearing grace. On such as Miss Manners, you would be well advised to continue with it.

DETROIT — The trial to determine where Billy Sims will play football next year begins today in federal court. The battle is expected to last five days.

U.S. District Judge Robert E. D Emmos will preside over the trial. Mrs. Sims continues with the Detroit Lions of the National Football League or moves to the Houston Gamblers of the United States Football League. The hearing marks the first time Mrs. Sims has signed five-year contract with each.

Sims signed a $3.5 million contract with the Gamblers on July 1 and an amended agreement Nov. 12, the UFL team said. He got $197,508 in July as part of a $1 million signing bonus, the Gamblers said. He also signed a $5 million pact with the Lions Dec. 16, that team said.

Sims was in various courtrooms both in Michigan and in Texas, but they eventually landed in federal court at the request of all parties because of the geographical diversity of the principals.

The basic suit has been split into two parts.

One is the question of which contract Mrs. Sims must honor. Then, if DeMasco decides that the Lions’ contract with Mrs. Sims is valid, there may be a separate trial to determine whether Argovie and the Gamblers owe the Lions damages.

But for now the question is only the issue.

Elbert Hatchett, Sims’ attorney, said that the case would be decided in a day and a half. Attorneys for the Gamblers, however, felt it could last up to five days.

Hatchett said that he would call Sims, Argovie, and “people who were present when the contracts were signed.”

LOS ANGELES — Los Angeles residents, who greeted the Raiders with casual indifference during most of their two years here, turned out in force yesterday to honor the Super Bowl champions.

A crowd put at 25,000 to 30,000 greeted members of the team during a noontime rally on the steps of City Hall in crowded downtown.

"This magnificent team has brought the city together like never before in history," Mayor Tom Bradley said. ... "Sunday's victory was a clear demonstration of a commitment to excellence."

The Raiders — 22 players attended the civic celebration under clear skies and warm weather — were given keys to the city and proclamations from the City Council and the county Board of Supervisors. The crowd jammed onto a lawn outside City Hall and others watched the festivities from nearby office buildings — both from inside and on rooftops.

Three popular Raiders spoke to the crowd, many drenched in the team's colors of silver and black. "I am in love with Los Angeles," said running back Marcus Allen, the Super Bowl MVP. "I'm extremely excited to have everyone here to celebrate the world championship we brought back to L.A. The L.A. Raiders are here to stay."

Allen, who gained a Super bowl record 191 yards in Sunday's 38-9 victory over the Washington Redskins in Super Bowl XVIII, was the crowd favorite. The former Heisman Trophy winner from the University of Southern California was serenaded by that school's marching band, who entertained before the ceremony.

Defensive lineman (ye Alford, who perhaps symbolizes the Raider spirit more than any other player, told the crowd he had been waiting "a long time for a championship."

"It's a great experience," he said. "There's nothing like a world championship. Enjoy the world championship."

Derrick Jensen, who scored the first touchdown Sunday after blocking a Redskins punt, said the title was "a result of the drive and dedication of (owner) Al Davis and (coach) Tom Flores."

Davis did not attend yesterday's celebration, but Flores did.

"This (the crowd's response) is unbelievable," said Flores, who has guided the club to two Super Bowl titles in four years. "The excitement of this crowd showed in our locker room every day. We've taken over Los Angeles as our home."

Rich Marotta, a Raider's radio announcer and emcee for the celebration, quoted police as saying the crowd was the largest ever to honor one of the city's championship sports teams.

The crowd interrupted Bradley when he tried to introduce political figures, chanting "Raiders! Raiders! Raiders."

Bradley suggested last week that the NFL should give Oakland an expansion team to replace the Raiders, who moved here two years ago after a bitter court fight that still is being waged.

Yesterday's crowd made it clear the town's sports fans certainly won't let the Raiders go without a struggle.

Mama Marriott’s
Wednesday Night Italian Buffet
Starting January 11th

Every Wednesday it's Mama Marriott’s Italian Buffet in the Looking Glass Restaurant. A "buen gusto" array of antipasta, minestrone, fettucine, cacriatore, lasagne, pasta with four sauces, cheese, breads and desserts. All served up in a festive Italian atmosphere — checkered table cloths, "buon gusto." The line of Adam Parsons, Mike Metzler, and co-captain Brent Chapman were responsible for seven of the ten Notre Dame goals in the series. When the Irish take the ice tonight, they will be without the services of Steve Ely and Tom Parent. Both are serving suspensions for game disqualification penalties received in the St. Norbert series over the weekend. On top of this, Gary Becker and Dave Waldbillig will possibly miss the game because of shoulder injuries suffered in last Saturday’s victory over the Green Knights. "We’re going to be a little bit short-handed," says Head Coach Lefty Smith, "but hopefully we’ll be able to accept the challenge."

There will be at least one change in the lineup tonight. That change will have co-captain Joe Bowles moving from defense to play left wing on the line with Tim Reilly and Rick Kennedy. "Lake Forest is a fine club," says Smith. "We had two excellent games with them in December. Both clubs have respect for one another, so it should be a good game."

Smith tentatively has Lakenda penciled in as his starting goal-­‐keeper, but admits that there is a possibility that he will go with Haverkamp. Face-off is set for 8:30 p.m. Notre Dame time.

Wednesday, January 25, 1983 — page 10

HOLTON — Athletic directors at collegiate football powers Notre Dame and Texas are trying to schedule a home-and-home series, probably in the mid 1990's.

Gene (Notre Dame Athletic Director Gene Corrigan) and I have talked about it several times and every time we talk about it, it sounds better," Texas Athletic Director DeLoss Dodds told the Houston Chronicle yesterday.

"I think it would be good," Corrigan said. "We've talked at length about it and we decided that we are going to do it."

The two teams have met eight times previously, with Notre Dame winning six of the contests.

Texas would replace Penn State on an Irish schedule which already includes football powerhouses Michigan, Michigan State, Southern California, Alabama, and Pittsburgh, according to Corrigan.

"There's no way we're going to play Penn State and Texas in the same season, not with all the other tough games we have," he said.

The Notre Dame hockey team will put its undefeated record on the line again tonight at Lake Forest. More on the Irish team as it heads into tonight's game, see Ed Domansky's story below.

Irish Items

Hello again, everybody.

After winning nine of their last 11 games, it can truly be said that Digger Phelps and the Fighting Irish basketball team are the hottest of the Notre Dame campus right now (including the weather and the dining hall food). Talk already is circulating about the Irish going to the NCAA tournament for the first time in three years. March, but optimism should be guarded. There’s no doubt this Notre Dame team is capable of getting into the field of 53. But with the tough part of the schedule and the ACC unknown, the Irish know they have to take things one step at a time.

Two big steps toward that goal play come this week as the Irish face Davidson tonight, before taking on fifth-ranked Maryland Saturday afternoon. Forget about Davidson’s dismal 6-10 record — The Wildcat is waning without the services of point guard Bubba Horsey.

How about Howard? One of the main reasons for the improved play of the Irish is the acquisition of point guard Howard. "Small Wonder" has made a big adjustment to the grind of the court in fine fashion, sparking the Irish in a reserve role. While he is averaging 8.4 points a game, his play behind the foul line has been outstanding. "Howard has been an uncanny knack for driving the lane and finding the open man. There remain only one question about Howard: "Can he play any other sports?"

Wildcats slip
Sports Writer

Coach Bobby Hussey’s club resembles the Irish in several ways. Davidson is a very young club, relying on seniors Kevin Wilson and Kevin Stavely O’Carroll, in the backcourt. Hussey knows, however, that his team’s recent coaching changes have brought a new team spirit saying, "We’re going to play well along with Kenny. That’s about the story of our season." Hussey knows, however, that the Wildcats this year is an extremely young team, Hussey continues. "We only have one senior and we’re playing all sophomores and freshmen." The key to the game for the Irish will be stopping that one senior — forward Kenny Wilson. When, who is averaging 18.8 points per game this season, scored 17 in last year’s meeting.

Hussey says he is aware that Wilson must play well if the Wildcats are to fare well in the ACC tonight. "We really haven’t had very much consistency to go with Kenny," says the Davidson coach. "He’s our senior and he normally plays well. As a general rule, he plays his better games against better people. I hope that’s true again (tonight)."

Kevin was impressive," praised Toth-Fejél. "He has an unorthodox style, but it works and he gets the job done."

The match against Parkside was a barnburner, as evidenced by the closeness of the score. In fact, it went down to the last match of the night — the 1-4 pound class.

Before the match Notre Dame led Parkside 20-18, and the visitors needed a win from their wrestlers to win the team competition.

Notre Dame freshman Scott Bisueti wrestled for the Irish, and he took it down to the wire, losing 6-5.

The New York resident fought an uphill battle the whole match. He was behind by a point for most of the period, and almost won by getting a takedown at the end of the third period, but he fell one point short at time ran out.

Junior Louis Carnesale also wrestled for the Irish, but he was also defeated, as he was 6-5-0 and 0-7-0.

Following a recent coaching change, the Notre Dame wrestling team seems to be full of renewed excitement and spirit. This change in team spirit was evidenced last night at the ACC. Pat the tri-meet against Indiana University and Wisconsin-Parkside.

One Irish wrestler commented on the new team spirit saying, "We’re very motivated now."

The wrestler was referring to the marked change in the motivation of the team since the appointment of Tihamer Toth-Fejél as interim mentor of the Irish. This new spirit was definitely evidenced in Notre Dame’s surprising defeat of IU, 25-11.

The Irish fought Parkside to the end, losing 21-20 with a loss in the final match of the evening.

Toth-Fejél was quite pleased with his team’s performance. "I expected to be blown out by both schools," said Toth-Fejél. "But our guys were up for it, and they really wrestled well.

Freshman Greg Fleming opened the evening with excitement by taking his opponent down, 9-0, with an escape at the end of the match. Phil Baty also looked good for the Irish in his 5-2 win.

Phil wrestled really well," commented Toth-Fejél. "He had it lost to his opponent a couple times before this time. But he won. I was very pleased with his performance."

Kevin Stavely O’Carroll, in the 150-pound division, also wrestled extremely well, providing the Irish with 3 team points in his 6-0 decision of his opponent.

Kevin was impressive," praised Toth-Fejél. "He has an unorthodox style, but it works and he gets the job done."

The time has come to turn the tables.

One year ago, the Notre Dame men’s basketball team was upset in overtime, 94-81, by Davidson College in the ACC Pit in Charlotte, N.C. The Fighting Irish will enter the ACC Pit on Saturday night after a hard-fought victory over Villanova last night and a convincing win over Rice on Monday. This will be the first ACC game for the Fighting Irish in the final game of the opening weekend series.

The Irish fought Parkside to the end, evidencing last night at the ACC Pit in Charlotte, N.C., the Irish are a strong team. Hussey knows, however, that the Wildcats this year is an extremely young team, Hussey continues. "We only have one senior and we’re playing all sophomores and freshmen." The key to the game for the Irish will be stopping that one senior — forward Kenny Wilson. When, who is averaging 18.8 points per game this season, scored 17 in last year’s meeting.

Hussey says he is aware that Wilson must play well if the Wildcats are to fare well in the ACC tonight. "We really haven’t had very much consistency to go with Kenny," says the Davidson coach. "He’s our senior and he normally plays well. As a general rule, he plays his better games against better people. I hope that’s true again (tonight)."

Kevin was impressive," praised Toth-Fejél. "He has an unorthodox style, but it works and he gets the job done."

The match against Parkside was a barnburner, as evidenced by the closeness of the score. In fact, it went down to the last match of the night — the 1-4 pound class.

Before the match Notre Dame led Parkside 20-18, and the visitors needed a win from their wrestlers to win the team competition.

Notre Dame freshman Scott Bisueti wrestled for the Irish, and he took it down to the wire, losing 6-5.

The New York resident fought an uphill battle the whole match. He was behind by a point for most of the period, and almost won by getting a takedown at the end of the third period, but he fell one point short at time ran out.

Junior Louis Carnesale also wrestled for the Irish, but he was also defeated, as he was 6-5-0 and 0-7-0.
