Hesburgh outlines other University action taken to end apartheid

By ELLYN MASTAKO Senior Staff Reporter

Divestment of South African investors is not the only method for the University to help bring an end to apartheid, according to University president Father Theodore Hesburgh.

Notre Dame’s activities aimed at ending apartheid include:

• Membership in a consortium of 16 college and university presidents urging the elimination of apartheid.
• Leadership in a program to provide scholarships for South African theologians, a special effort is being made to open up slots for them in top American centers for theological study.
• Father Hesburgh’s participation in what was originally called “the gang of eight” (the presidents of Notre Dame, Harvard, Yale, Stanford, and Princeton, and the chief executive officers of the Carnegie, Ford, and Rockefeller Foundations) to put collective pressure on South Africa.
• “Notre Dame writes to the consuls that we know have interests in South Africa and asks them to write back to tell us what they are doing to help alleviate apartheid. We will now send them our new investment policy concerning South Africa and they will have to let us know if their policies are in line with ours.”

HPC: Advance the position of the student body on student life issues
• Approve all cabinet appointments
• Bring bills of impeachment
• Select the members of the Judicial Review Board
• Set regulations for all elections
• Approve all SAB Steering Committee appointments

• Omnibusman will set regulations for all elections
• SAB Steering Committee will approve student body to the Trustees
• Committee on the budget becomes a separate entity which will determine the fiscal policies with CLC’s approval. Off-campus vote taken off committee, senior class president and student body president added

HPC can work without a senate, he added.

“Very important issues have come up in the senate and have died,” said Pasquerilla East President Carlo Hand. The student voice has been made ineffective with the senate in existence. The senate has a voice, the same as any organization has; it was just not being heard, according to Fisher Hall President Bill Jelen. “History proves the CLC and HPC can work without a senate,” he added.

The Notre Dame Student Senate may be voted out of existence if students approve a referendum scheduled for tomorrow. According to Student Body Vice President Dwayne Lawrence, the senate’s elimination would decrease inefficiency in student government.

Lawrence is among a group of five student leaders who originally made the proposal to disband the senate and to distribute its powers to the Campus Life Council and Hall Presidents’ Council.

According to Student Body President Bill Healy, “there is no need for senate to exist. It has no function.”

The senate is an extra bureaucracy with overlapping responsibilities, according to Judicial Coordinator Karen Ingwersen, who was also a sponsor of the original proposal. She and Lawrence both said they believe by eliminating the senate, the overlap of duties currently existing between the HPC and CLC could be eliminated.

Students should vote for the amendment because it is the “best bet for returning to more effective, less bureaucratic student government,” according to Fisher Hall President Bill Jelen. “History proves the CLC and HPC can work without a senate,” he added.

Medical and scientific gains shape, yet fail to control, the role of fate

With his great nose forging his way, Cyrano de Bergerac swaggers across the stage as the title character in Edmond Rostand’s romantic adventure. Cyrano is the dashing swordsman, clever and passionate poet, fearless leader of the Gascogne and a French hero.

Although “Cyrano de Bergerac” is billed as a “passionate tale of romance and adventure,” the play also demonstrates the grip with which fate holds man. Obviously Cyrano has no control over the size of the nose with which he was born. Yet, it is his grotesque facial appendage that hinders Cyrano from announcing his love for Roxanne.

Through the course of the play Cyrano battles 100 men to defend a friend, duels a master swordsman and leads the Gascogne in war against the Spanish. But in the end it is the villainous fate that kills the hero. Near the close of the second act, as Cyrano strolls through an alley, an iron bar falls loose from a balcony and strikes him on the head. Eventually he dies from the concussion.

Three centuries later, people no longer are doomed to Cyrano’s nasal misfortune. Plastic surgery represents relief. But man’s technological, medical and scientific advances are not restricted to the area of corrective surgery. In so many aspects of life, man’s progress has enabled him to take a better grasp on the reins of his world.

A look at the front page of yesterday’s New York Times, however, shows fate still is winning the game. The Nevada del Ruiz volcano in Columbia erupted last week. Now more than 21,000 people are dead in that country. Two months earlier, an earthquake killed 3,000 in Mexico. Scientists blame these disasters on the geological descent of the Pacific Ocean floor under the American coast, something man cannot prevent.

Despite millions of dollars and years of research, diseases such as cancer and AIDS remain fatal and incurable realities. Neither scientists nor doctors have been able to conquer these afflictions. Throughout the world, thousands in prisons under South Africa’s proclaimed system of “apartheid,” presenting a news analysis of the situation wrote that the official’s own goals, domestic pressures, leadership abilities, senses of history and personalities will play key roles. The conference and in this respect, the future of the world, are in man’s control.

For now, fate seems to be waiting out the nuclear context and the show in South Africa. But man has not closed the curtain on fate. The newspapers document it. Thousands of victims around the world will attest to it.

Besides brute force and economic power man also is harnessing his technological progress in attempts to control other people.

For three decades the world’s super powers have been developing and stockpiling nuclear arms. The United States and the Soviet Union, representing two prevailing ideologies, have chosen to protect and advocate their ideologies with the threat of weapons capable of disintegrating civilization.

Later this week President Reagan and Mikhail Gorbatchev, the Soviet leader, will sit down in Geneva to review the arms race. Their goal is to impede the contest. But yesterday’s Times warned against high expectations. Peace and fear will help shape the summit conference. A reporter who presented a news analysis of the situation wrote that the officials’ own goals, domestic pressures, leadership abilities, senses of history and personalities will play key roles. The conference and in this respect, the future of the world, are in man’s control.

For now, fate seems to be waiting out the nuclear contest and the show in South Africa. But man has not closed the curtain on fate. The newspapers document it. Thousands of victims around the world will attest to it.

Geneva summit holds the promise for a U.S. - Soviet turning point

By MARY BERGER
Staff Reporter

"It could mark a turning point between a period that has seen increasingly antagonistic relations and a new period of improving relations," said Notre Dame Government and Foreign Affairs Professor Brinkley of this week's United States-Soviet union summit.

Brinkley, the director of the University's Program of Soviet and East European Studies, said he feels "if the summit goes smoothly, it is conceivable that relations between the super powers could, in a few years, become as good as they were in 1975."

It is necessary to keep in mind that "decisions at its best does not represent the sources of conflict and can make them less threatening."

Arms control, bilateral issues, regional relations, and human rights are the four main issues which will be debated in Geneva tomorrow and Wednesday.

Gilbert Loesch, an assistant professor in the Government and International Studies Department, commented on the role of the human rights issue. "Arm control will most likely be the central issue," he said, "but there are enough interests in test groups pushing the President to raise the human rights issue that he will.

"It would be wrong of the United States not to speak out," Brinkley said but added, "as long as they are able to criticize the violations in the right-wing regimes they are associated with."

a company with deep roots to South Africa's non-white communities, we feel a special obligation to participate actively in the dismantling of apartheid."

The purpose of the emphasis on educational scholarships is to build future leadership among blacks in South Africa because the problem of apartheid won't go away," said Hesburgh. He said he feels that a key to ending apartheid in South Africa is a well-educated black population. By offering university scholarships to African blacks, something that they are not allowed in their native country, American universities are trying to help educate the new leaders.

"The United States is concerned with the things the West holds dear: freedom and the treatment of dissenters like Vitaly Yurchenko, among other things," Loesch explained. He said that the Soviet Union is criticizing the United States of not fulfilling its economic and social duties to its people" by not providing full employment and national health care programs, for instance.

"The United States is not perfect in its implication of human rights," he said. "But it is the sign of a mature nation when it can accept criticism gracefully and work towards improving its performance."

Brinkley said some agreements, such as the terms of a new cultural and educational exchange treaty, have already been reached. He added that other relatively easy agreements concerning things like airline landing rights and embassy facilities will probably be announced.

"If there are any compromises on arms issues, they will probably be in the form of negotiating positions and results will not be seen until the arms negotiations reach their peak," Brinkley said.

Brinkley said he feels this historic summit will last six "shaky" years of negotiating between the United States and the Soviets. He said that the talks will eventually lead to a new arms limitation treaty, significantly reducing missiles and warheads, but that this depends on whether and how the ABM issue is resolved.

"It is also possible that none of these things will result in the peace because both leaders might want primarily to impress each other by the form of negotiating positions and results."

Previously known as "the gang of four," a group of both business and academic leaders, who have set up 400 scholarships for South African students to study in the United States. "We have some of those students here at Notre Dame and we will get more," he said.

Hesburgh continued, "There is a sense of optimism from South Africans and the students are more likely now that both nations have apparently given up the notion that they can live through unconditional disarmament."

"The United States is not perfect or dorm issues, thus destroying the voice of the students," Hagan said. "We have set up the assembly of individuals that can necessarily can't do this job and provide the mechanism to address dorm issues but the CLC, the HPC and the C.I.C are not the answer."

University food stand ‘taking business away’

By MARK DILLON
Senior Staff Reporter

A concession stand, run by University Food Services, is competing with Notre Dame student organizations in fundraising during home football weekends.

The Food Services’ stand is located between Dillon Hall and the South Dining Hall each football Saturday. It has been in operation for almost two years.

University Food Services Director Bill Hickey gave reasons for the stand: “My organization has a responsibility to Notre Dame students, alumni, and visitors to provide them with a food service.” He added, “The outdoor concession stand is an extension of this service and is meant to handle the overflow from the Oak Room.”

Student run concessions are located throughout the campus. The student run concessions are assigned each year by Student Activities Director Joni Neal declined comment on the story until confering with Hickey.

Club sports, each of the four classes, volunteer organizations, and other student groups all receive an opportunity to run a concession stand to raise funds, but this is not guaranteed. However, as of yet, none has guaranteed one stand each season.

The Food Services concession has raised several complaints from some of these groups. Lee Brandon, the student activities board director said, “I am against it. They are taking business away from the student clubs, organizations and charities. I don’t think it’s justified.”

Judith Windhorst, president of Badin Hall, brought her complaint to last Tuesday night’s Hall Presidents’ Council. Windhorst said, “I wanted it heard at the issue concerning the competition by University Food Services because of complaints I had gotten from the girls who ran our concession stand.”

She said, “We’re trying to raise money so we petition for space and get one shot regardless of the weather. They are out every week and they don’t have to compete for space.” Windhorst said, “During our concession during the Navy game our girls were out in the lousy weather before and after the game, because of the organization backing the Food Services’ stand they could provide a tent for their people.” she added.

The Knights of Columbus are also against the University Food Services concession. Although John Rodgers, co-chairman of the steel sales admitted they were having no problems with the competition he did voice a complaint. He said, “I don’t think they should do it. They are better organized. It is the one time we can make money.”

Student Body President Bill Healy said, “There have been complaints. Students don’t have the resources that University Food Services do.”

In response Bill Hickey said, “I was a member of the Knights of Columbus I know that (Knights of Columbus) volume and I know it hasn’t hurt.” He also said, “My organization had a duty to this University to provide a service. All our profits go back into the general fund of the University.”

In response to complaints about the competition Hickey said, “Our organization might actually hurt us. I’ve heard some students advising against our concession in their sales pitches because they’ve dining hall hamburgers.”

Hickey also said, “I’ve seen the crowds and I don’t think we are hurting anyone’s business. We provide a dynamic service to this University and I think we do a good job. The outdoor concession stand is just part of our service.”

Both Healy and Windhorst agreed with this. Healy said, “Anytime Mr. Hickey can help his students he has. He is a reasonable man. If it hurts he’ll change it.”

Windhorst said, “Mr. Hickey and his organization do a lot of good. He shouldn’t be dealing with angry letters in the Observer like he was with the Oak Room sign. I brought up the complaint at HPC so that it would be dealt with through proper channels.”

Healy said he planned to discuss the issue with Hickey this week.

Former associate Justice Goldberg reviews legal and political opinions

By PEGGY PROSSER
Senior Staff Reporter

“We all set goals for ourselves. Don’t set impossible goals and don’t feel depressed because you don’t become a Supreme Court Justice or President.”

Arthur Goldberg, a former associate Justice of the Supreme Court began his lecture last night by explaining the extent of his own success, and attributing it to “mere luck.”

Under the topic, “A Jew in the International Public Eye, A Personal Perspective,” Goldberg addressed key issues, such as discrimination and quota systems, based on his own experiences in political life.

He began his lecture by addressing the topic of peace, describing the United States and Russia as “two great powers capable of mass destruction.”

Expressing his dislike for President Reagan, Goldberg said he would like to see the current negotiations between the United States and Russia to be conducted with realism and success.

He added, “Anything we can do to minimize the (negotiations) would be worthwhile.”

Goldberg recognized the presence of conflict in the Arab states, but reminded the audience that peace is not an end, and hopes should not be built up too soon.

Along with serving as general counsel to several international labor unions, Goldberg was the principal architect of the AFL-CIO merger. This merger served to strengthen labor unions by eliminating fighting over representation.

Following this, Goldberg was appointed Secretary of Labor under John F. Kennedy.

In his speech, Goldberg was quick to praise Kennedy for his acute mind and ultra-devotion to the American people.

Kennedy later appointed Goldberg to associate Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court. Goldberg discussed this by giving examples of the exaggerated view Americans have of the Court’s role.

Justice Arthur Goldberg

“The Supreme Court cannot make war at peace, cannot make or cure unemployment, cannot balance the budget and cannot give us the education system we deserve. Basically, what they do is make moralistic decisions, such as Brown vs. the Board of Education, which helped break down the barriers of discrimination.”

In 1965, President Johnson appointed Justice Goldberg to the United States ambassadorship to the United Nations. Although the Supreme Court is a life appointment, Goldberg gave up his seat on the bench for this opportunity. Dean David Link of the Notre Dame Law School described Goldberg as a “significant figure in many developments in this country,” and praised Johnson for choosing Goldberg as “the right man for the job.”

As an international diplomat, Goldberg played a significant role in the drafting of U.N. Resolution 242, the foundation for peace in the much-troubled middle east.

As a former lawyer, Goldberg praised the law schools for teaching the mainstream of law and their success at teaching of the law.

Along with his lecture, Goldberg fielded questions from the audience. When asked his view on religion, Goldberg stated, “We are not a Jewish nation. We are not a Christian nation. Under the Constitution of the United States, everybody has the right to practice their own religion.”

Goldberg described religious discrimination in industry and politics, citing examples of steel companies that were not open to Jews or Catholics, and the use of a quota system on the Supreme Court.

He criticized Reagan for his unbalanced representation of religions in his cabinet, then questioned whether or not a quota system should exist.

In recognition for his numerous achievements, Goldberg was awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom in 1978, the highest award an American can receive, and has earned more than twenty-five honorary Doctor of Law degrees from universities throughout the world.

Insufficient proposal does not deserve vote

Tomorrow could be a new beginning. Students will have the opportunity to support or reject an amendment which would initiate a major change in student government. Several student leaders have proposed this amendment as an alternative to the bureaucratic Student Senate.

The proposed amendment in tomorrow's referendum does not deserve student support. A vote against this amendment is not a vote for the Student Senate. No one denies that the senate, as it is used now, is a highly ineffective body. Changes are needed. Soon.

The proposed plan to replace the senate, although it does contain some excellent ideas, has several inherent weaknesses. These weaknesses must be resolved before such a drastic step is taken.

The proposal undermines many checks and balances in the current system. Under the new plan, the Hall Presidents' Council would inherit the senate's responsibility to check the power of the student body president, but the president would not be required to report to the HPC or attend its meetings. Although the president does chair the Campus Life Council, this body is not designed to fill the watchdog role that traditionally has been the senate's.

Elections would be controlled entirely by Ombudsman under the new plan. Although in fact OUB has exercised most of the control in past elections, the senate's power to question OUB's actions is sometimes not just a "rubber stamp." No group should have unrestricted control over such a key government function.

In the same way, the judicial coordinator would have the sole responsibility to appoint members of the judicial review board. While it may be true that the senate usually approves the coordinator's nominees for these positions without debate, eliminating all power to approve or disapprove such choices could be dangerous.

Budget review, now controlled by the senate, would be transferred to the HPC. This is but one new duty that explicitly would come under the HPC's domain. Would this expanded role detract from the hall presidents' abilities to fulfill their duties within their dorms? Supporters of the amendment maintain that these additional powers are either quite "rubber stamps" or already are carried out by the HPC. Common sense dictates that important functions such as these would demand an additional commitment of time and effort.

The HPC has proved itself an effective body. The additional burden the new senate would or should place on HPC coordinators might damage rather than expand the HPC's role as a link for communication between students and their government.

The proposal was drafted hastily. The bulk of the amendment was written by two student leaders. This rushed proposal developed by so few students has not adequately considered other options or foreseen potential problems.

For example, a proposal for a new student subcommittee of the Campus Life Council followed in the wake of the proposed amendment. This subcommittee might be an adequate student voice in the absence of the senate, but at this stage it is ill-defined. The proposed subcommittee sounds suspiciously like a modified senate.

The first leaders proposing this amendment should be applauded for their efforts to untangle student government bureaucracy. The proposal shows much enthusiasm and acknowledges the ineffectiveness of the senate.

This amendment's shift of emphasis to the CLC also is encouraging. This body towards women's athletics.

Notre Dame prides itself on having "the greatest student body" in attendance at sporting events. There are sellout crowds for every home football and basketball game. But when the women are playing, "the greatest student body" has something more important to do. When the men are playing, we'll drop everything to go. When the women are in action, we find numerous excuses not to go.

The women's volleyball team, along with the women's basketball team, play extremely hard schedules against national opponents. They also play their games in front of extremely small crowds. Would it not be satisfy­ ing to them if they could play their games in front of the same large crowds as the men do? The only time substantial amounts of students attend the games is when someone such as the Mynderse Academy is sponsoring a promotion before the game, or when the men play after the women are finished. This apathy is unfair to those women who make numerous sacrifices to play for Notre Dame.

One reason for this lack of support may be that we believe women's athletics is not as exciting as the men's. If you had been at the women's volleyball game last weekend, you would have seen that such a view is false. The women provided a thrill-a-minute during the game. With only a couple of women's basket­ ball games last year, I found the audience to be on par with that in the men's games.

Using the claim that women's sports are "not as good as the men's" is a sign that one does not know what he is talking about.

Contrary to a school where women's athletics is now bigger than the men's. In the past two years, the Mynderse Academy women have won three sectional titles, have gone to the state semifinals in soccer, and have added to Notre Dame's success in basketball. People still follow the Mynderse football team, but the men are more interested in women's athletics? No way. Women's athletics are more popular than ever. I ask you all to attend the volleyball games and to support women's basketball.

I attended the Notre Dame women's vol­ leyball game against Saint Francis on Oct. 50 and was disappointed with what I saw. No, I was not disappointed with the performance of the team. I thought they played an excellent game and treated this observer with a stun­ ning comeback in the final game of the match. What angered me was the student support for the game. What I should say is the lack of student support.

I asked Chuck Freeby, who was handing out programs to the sparse audience, if the atten­ dance was always this small. "Unfortunately," he said. That statement could well describe the general attitude of the student body towards women's athletics.

NVA all-nighter lets students roam ACC

DAVE FALISZEK

The new pool in the Rolf Aquatic Center was christened by the students Friday night at the Non-Varsity Athletics' all-nighter. The event was held to celebrate the completion of this new addition to the ACC and to raise money for the St. Joseph's County Special Olympics Organization.

The evening was a rare opportunity for students to use and enjoy all the facilities in the ACC. Although student attendance was not as large as was hoped, the event was successful in raising several hundred dollars for charity and in providing an excellent time for the students who attended.

For those students who elected not to go, you missed out on a great opportunity to try the new Aquatic Center. It is an impressive addition to the ACC, and who knows how often it will be made available to the students for their recreational use? Students also enjoyed shooting hoops on the same court where their favorite college team challenges its opponents. There was so much to do that it was difficult to decide between ice skating, basketball, swimming, racquetball, and many other sports.

Because attendance was low, the event was cut short at 2 a.m. Nonetheless, the students who were there really enjoyed themselves. The indoor soccer, nerf football, and basketball went especially well. The water sports also seemed to be popular. Freshman Kevin O'Later said that "the nerf football was really successful, without a doubt. I think the whole event was a great idea, but I think that they picked a poor date - a lot of people went away for the weekend or went to their hall's dance."

Sally Derengoski, assistant director of NVA, admitted mild disappointment over the low attendance but emphasized that she was delighted that those students who did participate had such a good time. It was especially heartwarming to see the interchange between the students and the special athletes who were present. She added that the Notre Dame/Saint Mary's community has a long tradition of involvement with Logan Center, a center for the mentally and physically handicapped. Junior Shannon Marks' tournament basketball team "Cool Breeze" played a team comprised of athletes from the center. He said that "a lot of good kids came over from the center, and a lot of volunteers showed up to support them."

It was a close game, and everybody had a fun time. He also noted that he thought the event was "a really good idea. Too bad more people didn't come out to support the cause."

In general, the event was considered a successful venture. Money was raised for a worthy cause, students had a good time, and the special athletes left a lasting impression on those who attended. Derengoski would like to see the all-nighter become an annual event. She feels that "given this opportunity to have a good time and to contribute to a good cause, we would hope that in the future the kids who had a good time tonight would pass on the word... Let it grow."
Malpractice suits - for the good of whom?

Malpractice. It is a word that can strike fear into the hearts of physicians and is one of the fastest growing problems facing the medical profession today. Although physicians have grown much more cautious in their practices due to the increased public awareness and greed is unconfined, both sides are suffering the consequences.

Dr. Harvey A. Bender, director of the Regional Genetics Center and a professor of genetics at Notre Dame, feels that the threat of malpractice affects everyday decisions made by doctors. Physicians in general have become much more cautious in their practices due to the increased awareness of liability.

Certain areas of specialization within the medical profession are especially affected by the threat of malpractice suits. Obstetrics, gynecology, surgery, and emergency medicine. One of the main reasons for the special danger faced by these groups is the "high stakes" nature of the cases. Their patients are often at risk of death from their medical condition, and these doctors are often asked to bring the situation under control. For example, Indiana has some particularly effective legislation concerning malpractice. There is a definite ceiling on the amount for which a settlement can be made, which is designed to protect the physician's rights, while still guarding against abuses of the system.

A 25-haftime score had many to his team's advantage. "We felt we still had an opportunity to come back, and Faust said after his quick touchdown, any-thing could happen and I felt the feel of that way too." But what happened was more of the same, as the Lions, like the weather, knotting it on the second half. Beuerlein threw his second intention on Notre Dame's first possession of the half and loom returned it to the Irish 32. From there he took it eight yards left to play, when reserves had scored on a two-yard touchdown run. But after quarterback Terry

Andrysiak was at the helm for Notre Dame's only scoring drive, but that apparent took on the form of the current Irish quarterback situation.

"I don't think either one of our quarterbacks played well," said the coach. "They (Faust) did play well, but I think that was the differ-

NOTRE DAME'S LUCAS COMBINES SCORING, SEASON OPENER TO THRILL CROWD

Notre Dame men's basketball fans got their first good look at the Irish last night, and local charities made $3,735, as the Irish played its annual intra-squad scrimmage. The proceeds from the $2.541 box will be split by Logan Center and the Neighborhood Study Help Program in South Bend.

The Irish played for 20 minutes under game conditions and 10 additional minutes with a running clock. After the first period, the Gold team led the Blue, 65-42. The score was reset for the second period, in which the Gold team scored 27 points to the Blue's 18.

Sophomore guard David Rivers led all scorers with 15 points for the Gold team in the first period and eight in the blue for the second.

Gary Vore, who played the entire game in a blue jersey, led all scorers for his squad with 23 points, and he led all rebounders with 11.

Blue teammate Joseph Price added 14 points. Six players scored in double figures for the Blue squad, led by Scott Hicks' 18 points.

The scrimmage was fast-paced, as both teams let the other shoot without much pressure, and with several players' slam dunks and some fancy passing by Rivers, who had six assists, brought cheers from the small crowd.

Irish head coach Digger Phelps refused to comment on the performance of his players. Notre Dame will play host to the St. Joseph's (Ind.) on Friday night at 7:30.

It may have looked like just another informal practice session last night at the ACC, when the Notre Dame women's basketball team staged its 1985 charity intra-squad scrimmage. But to Irish head coach Mary Distasianio, who is trying to iron out kinks as the team confronts a national contender after last year's successful 20-8 season, there was more to it than meets the eye.

The game, which featured two 10-minute halves and which allowed for several abrupt jersey switches from Blue to Gold, gave the Irish coaches a chance to see not only the reactions of the new players to the game situations but also to test the depth on the roster. Although the match showed Distasianio enough areas of needed repairs to keep her occupied until the season opener at Purdue Nov. 30, there were also enough pleasant sights to give Irish fans high hopes for the upcoming season.

"I think one thing we showed tonight is that we have depth," said Distasianio. "We also showed that we have a lot to work on. I'm glad tonight was only the scrimmage and not the first game."

If it had been the first game of the season, most likely that the Irish would have gone with the five players that constituted the Blue team. This squad, featuring guards Mary Gavin and Lynn Ehlen with center Sandy Bolith and forwards Trena Keys and Heidi Bunek, of the officially lost 92-60 to the Gold team led by Scott Hicks' 18 points.

Holy Cross coach Tom Myatt will undoubtedly have his team working overtime to win the St. Mary's Interhall flag football championship yesterday afternoon at Madeleva Field. With the victory, the Holy Cross edged their season with a 4-1 record to take third place in the Interhall league at 6-1.

Throughout the first half, both teams played exceptionally well. During its first possession, McCandless found the endzone. The play was called back, however, for a clipping penalty. A few minutes later, McCandless scored on a long run. The next two touchdowns were also well done.

In overtime, each team was given four downs from the 10 yard line in which to get into the endzone. Holy Cross scored on a pass from Stan Ayers to Heidi Bunek and Lisa (Kuhns) who scored very well. In addition, Holy Cross knocked off previously unbeaten McCandless 21-14 in overtimes.

Holy Cross coach Tom Myatt, who is trying to fine tune his team for the upcom ing season. He has had a few early butterflies to work out, but they too played very well.

A scrimage is still just a scrimmage, however, and the true test will come when the games begin on season. Before that, the other team won't be wearing Notre Dame jerseys.

Adele M. Jenkins, a member of the Crush squad, commented on her team's blocking skills. The game "was a real challenge for us." She cited Kelly Hayes, Jeanne Power and Patty Petro among others as those that were instrumental in the victory.

"Everyone played perfectly. They really wanted to win," commented Neroni. "McCandless had a good defense. We just couldn't win more."

Irish finish twelfth in cross country meet

The Notre Dame men's cross-country team fell short of its season-long goal of qualifying for the NCAA Division I nationals when they placed 12th out of 23 teams at the district meet in Indiana University's track meet. There were at least a few bright spots in the season finale.

Out of those positive notes was the performance of freshman sensation Ron Markezich who at 50th place was the top Irish finisher.

"Ron has helped us all season and will be a very good one," said Irish coach Joe Piane.

Following Markezich were Tom Warth, Craig Maxfield and Tim Diamond. John Magill finished in 72nd place but did not round out the scoring in a fairly tight pack finish.

Wirth, Craig Maxfield and Tim Diamond represent the country runners will excel in the season's positive points, though.

"Jim had a very good season, while the team finished with the Ohio State lip meet against tough Missouri Baptist. We competed very well in the National Catholic meet (finishing third), at the State meet, and at the Midwesters Championship," said Piane. It's confident that this cross country runners will excel in the track season.

"They are in the best possible shape right now, barring injuries."

Penn State routs Irish, locks up Orange Bowl bid

Lions overcome weather; ND hopes dimmed

By MARTY BURNS
Assistant Sports Editor

Irish quarterback Steve Beuerlein (7) attempts to recover a first-half fumble in Notre Dame's 36-6 loss to Penn State. Larry Burke has game details in his story at right, and Eric Scheuermann takes a look at the Lion's defense in his story below.

Irish head coach Lehy Smith may just want to never close his eyes again after this weekend's action at the ACC. Friday the Irish made Smith's dreams come true, combining solid defense and staunch goal-tending to beat visiting St. Thomas College, 5-3. Saturday's rematch, however, was a nightmare for the eighth-year coach as Notre Dame mentor as his team slipped to a 3-2 loss.

Both teams came into the game riding high. Head Coach Joe Paterno's Nittany Lions had their undefeated record and their scoring prowess to thank for being in that position, while Paterno's Irish counterpart, head coach Lou Holtz, had the momentum of a four-game winning streak on their side. When it was all over, however, the Irish had still lost the game, their only chance for success in the national polls, while Paterno's Lions had the memories of a victory that would come out so flat after their success the previous season.

In fact, the Saturday crowd of just 3,000 thought they were coming out of the tunnel and into the fourth quarter and the game would just be getting started. The Lions, however, проблем nightmarish for the eighteenth year in a row, had their dreams come true, combining solid defense and staunch goaltending to beat the Irish, 36-6, before an estimated 10,000 fans and a national television audience.

And so it was that the Lions, with only 400-odd fans in the stands, beat the Irish in their own House, where they had never been defeated in 11 years.

"I thought football is a great game because you have to beat the other guy, the elements, and yourself," said Paterno. "I was not as concerned about the weather as far as our team was concerned. I thought it would be a question of whether our team was able to concentrate and not get careless with the football."

Holtz wasa little more concerned, however. "In retrospect, I'm happy that Paterno's Lions, who fumbled the ball just once all day despite the adverse conditions.

Things started out well for the Irish, as quarterback Steve Beuerlein completed six straight passes on a 70-yard drive that culminated in the Penn State 21-yard line. John Carrier gave up on a 3-11-yard field goal attempt, and that's when Notre Dame's defense began to recover. Not only did the Ponies hold the Lions to three 3-and-outs, but they held the ball at the Irish 34.

After that game, Smith praised his team. "I thought our penalty killing did a good job overall," said Smith. "I and I thought we moved the puck around well on the power-play, although we didn't put it in too often."

The Irish put it in when they counted, however, getting the lone tally of the first period when Sophomore Charlie Smith beat Tommie goalie Mike Tabbles from 15 feet out on a pass from winger Tim Reilly. Sobilo's other power-play goal was the backbreaker, coming 17 seconds into the third period and giving Notre Dame the winning margin at 2-0.

Although St. Thomas, a Division II power which beat the Irish twice last season, could not mount a comeback after the final buzzer Friday, it made up for the delay the following night. The Tommies peppered Notre Dame goalies Marc Pinkett and Jeff Woods with 31 shots, but the Irish defense was once again the story of the night. Two Tommie passes stepped over the Irish nets.

The Irish, on the other hand, used a strong performance by sophomore goalie Tim Pinkett to keep the Lions from making a come back. After that, it was all downhill.

These statistics tell only part of the story. The Penn State defense knew that they would not come close to scoring un- assisted, so flat after the their success the previous season. But the Lions, who had the memories of a victory that would come out so flat after their success the previous season, still had their dreams come true, combining solid defense and staunch goaltending to beat the Irish, 36-6, before an estimated 10,000 fans and a national television audience.
