Divestment urged by visiting priest in hunger strike

By TRIPP BALTZ

News Editor

Father Basil van Rensburg, a visiting priest from Cape Town, South Africa, said today he would begin a fast calling for the University to divest from companies that do business in his homeland.

Before a group of 60 to 65 people outside the Center for Social Concerns, Peter Walsh, director of African studies, announced Van Rensburg will live indefinitely on water alone.

"I will continue the fast as long as my medical advisors say I am in good health," Van Rensburg said, adding that as a priest he is not at liberty to let his health deterivate.

As he read from a prepared statement available to the crowd, Van Rensburg said he was "committing a public and official act of treason as consigned in South African law and will have to account for myself on my return to South Africa." Van Rensburg said his small in comparison to what black South Africans suffer every day.

Van Rensburg said he prays "the Lord will send the Holy Spirit to be present at the meeting of the Board of Trustees on the 9th and 10th of May." Van Rensburg said he is fasting at Notre Dame "because, unexpectedly, I found myself on this campus." The educator said he had planned to go to Rome or Britain or广州, but decided to come to the campus because he was impressed by reports on the University's Center for Continuing Formation in Ministry.

"I was also conscious of Notre Dame's standing in the Catholic world of learning. Moreover, it has become clear to me that Notre Dame's decisions have effects beyond the campus among America's 55 million Roman Catholics.

"In my look to Notre Dame for guidance on difficult issues, including divestment," Van Rensburg said.

Van Rensburg said he did not wish to embarrass the University or the administration by his action, but "Rather, I wish to encourage a spiritual and prayerful movement that is concerned to live out Gospel values and to identify with the poor and oppressed of South Africa."

Supporters placed their hands on Van Rensburg's head and joined him in prayer as he began his fast with a glass of Perrier. "Faith good," Van Rensburg said after finishing the drink.

Margarita Rose, chairman of the Anti-Apartheid Network, said that members of the network are asked to participate with Van Rensburg. "Needless to say, it will be difficult for Father (Van Rensburg). Certainly this is not a time to be alone. Rose said "No one is expected to fast for more than one day at a time," adding that prayers would be needed to guide the Trustees to choose divestment.

Malone suggests application of faith to all areas of life

By BUD LUEPKE

"It's clear that for anyone to live faithfully, he or she needs to apply faith to all areas of life," said Bishop James Malone, president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops (NCCB).

Malone, the featured speaker at this year's commencement exercises, said he considered addressing Notre Dame's graduating class to be a "distinct privilege."

"University President Father Theodore Hesburgh, besides respecting Malone's prominent standing in the Catholic Church, said that Malone was chosen because of a speech Malone gave earlier this fall in a seminar field in the law school on religion and politics.

According to Hesburgh, Malone gave "the best talk of the seminar. Malone, who Hesburgh described as the leader of the American Catholic hierarchy, said that American Catholics should participate in social policy.

"The continuing efforts of a teaching leadership is to show the relevance of Catholic teaching to contemporary issues," said Malone. "Believers, hearing this articulation, can examine ways in which they can respond to these issues," he added.

Malone said that the NCCB tries to link the ancient faith to contemporary problems so that faith "comes alive in the personal life" of American Catholics.

The NCCB, for which Malone served as vice-president, has published pastoral letters on such issues as peace and the economy. Malone said these "are examples of ways in which bishops should relate Catholic social teaching to contemporary issues."

Malone said the conference was now preparing a letter on the role of women in the Church which, he said, would not be published until 1990.

Hesburgh, who said he has known Malone for the past 30 years, said the bishop is "a great supporter of Catholic Higher Education."

Speaker process begins in autumn

By BUD LUEPKE

Staff Reporter

The choice of Bishop James Malone for commencement speaker is the result of a process which began early last fall, said University President Father Theodore Hesburgh.

Hesburgh said Malone's name came from a list of about 30 nominations which he considered and then passed on to the Board of Trustees. The board has the final say in selecting the speaker.

The board, the colleges, and the student class offices all played a role in compiling the list of possible speakers. These groups held conferences to discuss possible honorary degree recipients. Final recommendations were submitted on the list to Hesburgh. "I review it and submit their top choice to the Board of Trustees," Hesburgh said.

Hesburgh said comedian Bill Cosby, whose name was submitted by the student officers, had been invited, but Cosby turned it down because of other commitments.

Malone's name came from the board of trustees.

Supporters of Father Basil van Rensburg join him in prayer outside the Center for Social Concerns yesterday. Van Rensburg began a fast to share the suffering of his fellow South Africans and to encourage the University to divest. Story at right.

Faculty Senate to petition trustees to stop investment in South Africa

By DAN McCULLOUGH

Senior Staff Reporter

The Notre Dame Faculty Senate voted last night to petition the university's Board of Trustees to begin divesting its investments in American corporations that do business in South Africa.

The 28 to 2 vote, with 3 abstentions, passed a motion along with the "morally unacceptable" behavior of those corporations in South Africa.

The motion stated that the Continental faculty end apartheid and provided a franchise to South Africans of all races, the motion said.

The motion was written by Associate Professor Frank Connolly, of the mathematics department and was based upon a survey of Notre Dame faculty. The results of the survey, which were released earlier this week, showed 77.1 percent of respondents agreed that the Senate has a responsibility to raise this issue with the Board.

The motion listed three principles upon which the Notre Dame apartheid policy should be based. First, the motion said, "Notre Dame cannot remain indefinitely as an investor in a morally unacceptable order."

It continued, "American corporations in South Africa are comparatively enlightened employers of blacks, and yet they sustain the regime by supplying technology and, most importantly, by lending legitimacy to this unjust economic order."

Finally, "An announcement now of a divestment in the future can have an important symbolic effect. It can move other institutions to action, and it can create pressure against the policies of the South African regime."

The survey, upon which the motion was based, said 72.6 percent of the respondents agreed that Notre Dame should avoid complicity with the "morally unacceptable order." in South Africa. 66.9 percent of the respondents agreed that Notre Dame should avoid complicity with the "morally unacceptable order." in South Africa.

The motion said that the faculty "must now prepare a letter on the role of women in the Church which, he said, would not be published until 1990."

"I was also conscious of Notre Dame's standing in the Catholic world of learning. Moreover, it has become clear to me that Notre Dame's decisions have effects beyond the campus among America's 55 million Roman Catholics."

"In my look to Notre Dame for guidance on difficult issues, including divestment," Van Rensburg said.

Children joining ranks of homeless in U.S.

By CLIFF STEVENS
Copy Editor

The ranks of the U.S. urban homeless are rapidly expanding to include poor children and their families, according to New York City Homeless Coalition member Robert Hayes.

Hayes said that a "radical repudiation" of government housing policy and a "squeezing out" of urban poor from inner-city neighborhoods by affluent redevelopment is causing the housing shortage responsible for the "explosion of homeless families" during the past 18 months.

"The face of the homeless is literally the face of a child," said Hayes, asserting that the stereotype of the older mentally-ill or handicapped homeless is inaccurate.

According to Hayes, one out of four U.S. children live in poverty. "Poverty is becoming a function of children and often single-parent families," he said.

The Center for Social Concerns on the South Dining Hall described the problem yesterday at a special forum. "Somebody once said the only thing worse than slums is having no slums," said Hayes. "Nothing interested the New York City officials less than relief for the poor homeless," he said.

Hayes, a lawyer, also recounted his successful court battle for "the right of shelter" with New York State. Hayes said higher transportation costs started the urban trend called "gentrification" which replaces slums with high-priced "yuppie" housing that slum residents are unable to afford.

Over time, this trend creates a shortage of low-cost housing and promotes homelessness, according to Hayes.

"Somebody once said the only thing worse than slums is having no slums, and there is some truth to that," said Hayes.

Hayes said this redevelopment has been "actually encouraged, aided and abetted by city officials" for higher tax revenues.

Peace With Justice Week continues with the American Association of Catholic Colleges and Universities' national focus on peace. The Center for Social Concerns is sponsoring the week's events.

Hayes spoke yesterday at the Center for Social Concerns on the plight of the urban homeless.
Freshman lacrosse attacker

Olmstead shows great potential

By PETE SKIKO
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame lacrosse team, now almost midway through its season, is 3-2 and looking forward to the rest of the year with hope for a strong finish. Irish head coach Rich O'Leary can look even farther forward than that; three years farther to be exact, largely due to the presence of John Olmstead.

The freshman has received a good deal of playing time this season and has responded by scoring four goals in five games. O'Leary understands the amount of his young player's potential and says that experience in the form of varsity action is the most effective way to get at it.

"John has a great deal of maturity for a freshman," said the sixth-year head coach. "He's playing out of his high school position because we needed more attackers than midfielders. He's worked hard to improve his game, and it's showed.

John works with a lot of composure in front of the goal, and he always seems to beat the goalie." Olmstead appreciates the confidence that O'Leary has shown in his ability, and has completely freel ed with a team composed of many juniors and seniors.

"So far, my transition from high school lacrosse to Notre Dame's has been pretty smooth," said Olmstead. "The coaches have been totally understanding, and they've shown me a lot of little tricks that I've used to adjust to college play."

"Coach O'Leary doesn't hesitate to put me in during the tight spots, and that's the type of playing time I need to improve. The team is easily the best group of guys I've ever worked with."

"I can see how the uppersclassmen might be upset at seeing me play as much as I do, but I've never gotten any indication that they're (not) just trying to help me out as much as they can. A lot of my improve ment just comes from doing what I see the more experienced players do."

Olmstead, who has started three of the last five games the Irish have played thus far, attributes part of his success to his early recognition that the college game would be, to say the least, different from his high school career.

"I knew when I got here that the lacrosse would be more physical and much faster than before," said Olmstead, "so I really tried to get myself into shape. But I didn't expect to play as much as I have this early, so my physical condition is more important than ever."

"I think we're going to become better and better with experience. Right now, we're making sure those are my personal goals just coming from doing what I want to improve. The team is easily the best group of guys I've ever worked with."

AUGUSTA, Ga. - Tradition in the Masters, at least as overpowering as the beauty of the setting, is facing a challenge from a band of fiercely competitive young men, some of whom had never even seen the Augusta National Golf Club before.

"We're a new breed," said Dan Forsman, a winner on the PGA tour earlier this season who will make his first Masters start today on a course that once belonged to the likes of Jack Nicklaus and Arnold Palmer, and before them, Sam Snead and Ben Hogan.

"We are not afraid to tee it up with the established players and go head to head," said Forsman, one of a group of young stars who have, over the last few years, begun to supplement some of the game's more familiar names.

He is among those to be considered a contender in the 50th Masters, the first of the year's four major tournaments.

"They've showed they can win," Andy Bean said of the upstarts. "With the level of competition we have on the tour now, with the experience they get from the college programs, they're ready to win when they join the tour."

The select international field includes Scott Verplank and nine other amateurs, along with 78 professionals, including such new breed players as Bob Tway, Dennis Hammond and Kenny Knox, all winners this year and all making their first appearance in golf's annual spring rite.

screamed back—"the test."
Seemingly inspired by this speech, his team, Dave's Heavy Towing, went on to win, 25-23. Lombardi looks out, there is a new speech maker in town.

The second instance occurred when Chicks Are Still Dumb faced the Nads. Early in the game, Dave Twohy, playing for Chicks Are Still Dumb, injured his hip. While waiting for the ambulance, Twohy, lying on his back, told the guys not to give up. Following Twohy's removal from the court, the Nads, in a show of sportsmanship, decided to sit one player and continue the game as a four-on-four contest. The Nads eventually won the game, 21-11.

Two more teams were disqualified. One team was disqualified because it had no current Notre Dame students. All the players were Notre Dame alumni. The other disqualification came out when a student was caught playing for two different teams. At the present time, only one of the teams has been officially disqualified.

In the Nads victory, Tony Castellini grabbed 22 rebounds and Dan Genreau grabbed 16 for a combined total of 38. The hot shooter of the day was Michael Shim who shot 0-for-12 for Mag and the Nipple Cippers in a losing effort.

popularized the fast break, slam dunk, weave pattern and the fancy passing now commonly associated with the NBA. In those early years, the Trotters carried the new pro league, often playing doubleheaders with the fledgling league's teams to boost their attendance.

But now with players like David Rivers abounding in the college ranks and the NBA filled with the likes of Dominique Wilkins, the Trotters aren't as innovative as they once were. But with some of the plays and routines that the Trotters run, Austin says the NBA and the Globetrotters can't be compared.

"We can do anything those guys (in the NBA) can do," says Austin. "In fact, we can do more. It takes a lot of practice to do the things we do. There are things they just can't do, and they'll tell you that. We're professionals on one level, they're on another. There's no comparison."

Austin admits that the Globetrotters schedule of 150 games and the accompanying life on the road can be tough, but he says that he's doing something that he enjoys.

"You know, all my life I dreamt about playing for a team that wins every game, and here I am," Austin notes. "It happened, I love what I do and it fits my personality. I enjoy making people happy and the razzle-dazzle aspect. And I can give them my best game."

Showboat Gorilla in Bookstore, top-ranked teams at Stepan today

By MICHAEL KEEGAN

Before being captured and returned to his home, the Potawatomi Zoo, Homo Gorillus swung into action on Stepan Court 4 yesterday. Followed by a large crowd of banana-throwing crazes, Homo Gorillus lead 4 Guys in Muppet Shirts and a Gorilla against Sometimes the Best Things in Life Cost $10.

Only moments into action, Homo Gorillus's team scored the first basket. In celebration, yellow torpedos, disguised as bananas, were hurled onto the court in an attempt to appease the gorilla and make the opposition. Sometimes the Best Things in Life are free.

In the game between 4 Real Men and the Tongue Virgin and Scintillating Inducements, Homo Gorillus dressed as a Gorilla instead of a Monkey, as he was a direct descendent of King Kong. "Homo Gorillus is the long-ost offspring of King Kong," said Murphy. "We found him shooting baskets at the Potawatomi Zoo and thought that he would dominate the boards. Today though, there was a gorilla who was no more than a redbill. He had 10 baskets, 11 rebounds, and 14 blocked shots. John Stockton scored 15 baskets and grabbed 10 rebounds while leading the Scintillating Inducements to a 21-18 victory.

Problem attitudes concerning competitive play were highlighted in two games yesterday.

The absence of the importance of Bookstore Basketball in the life of the average student oc­urred to the game between One Hung and 4 Dragons and Dave's and John's. The score tied at 20 at 7:20 p.m., a nagging fan screamed to Brian Moffitt telling him that he had a test in 10 minutes. Moffitt, not willing to sacrifice his team's chances and realizing the importance of school in relation to Bookstore Basketball, see BOOKSTORE, page 6.

Globetrotters bring new player, basketball antics to the ACC

By DENNIS CORRIGAN
Sports Editor

When the Harlem Globetrotters visit the ACC tomorrow night (tickets are on sale at the ACC) they'll be featuring something new and unique: a female ball girl. The newest member of the Trotters is Lynette Woodard, the first woman ever to play for the world-famous team.

Woodard, a 6-0 guard, was the captain of the 1984 gold medal-winning women's Olympic basket­ball team and holds the NCAA percentage of an ape in Bookstore Basketball history. Treemate Pat Murphy said that Homo Gorillus was a problem with the weather. Homo Gorillus was not accustomed to this environment and, as a result, his play suffered.

"Lynette was a cut above the rest of the girls at the tryouts," if I had to choose, I would have chosen Lynette," he said.

"Off the court, you have to be more of a gentleman on the bus and all," says Austin, when asked what it's like to suddenly have a woman in a previously all-male environ­ment. "On the court, we're all professional so we just go out and play."

"It wasn't real hard to learn the entertainment part," says Austin. "I like the raucous-dazzling style. I just had to ease up on the competitive side and not worry about winning. Right now we play about 70 percent basketball and 30 percent of it is shots."

"When we're overseas, we have to put more entertainment into the game. We're there for the laughs. When we're in the United States, we have to play more basketball because that's what the people want to see. After all, basketball was founded here."

Yet the question remains, how serious are the Globetrotters about basketball?

"We do try to play to win every night," says Austin.

"Washington Generals (the Trotters' travelling opponents and straight men) try to win every night, too. We have to be prepared."

When the Trotters started in 1927, they introduced and see TROTTERS, page 6.

Irish baseball splits with MSU, defeats Illinois- Chicago, 11-7

By KEVIN HERBERT
Sports Writer

John Gleeson picked up his third save of the year yesterday to give the Irish an 8-7 win over Illinois-Chicago at cold and windy Kline Field.

The win came on the heels of Tuesday doubleheader split with host Michigan, 17-8.

"A lack of concentration in the later innings has really plagued us," said Notre Dame head coach Larry Gallo. "We have lacked the killer instinct."

Indeed, Notre Dame has given up a combined total of 14 runs in the final inning of its last three games.

In the opening game Tuesday, the Irish and Spartans were tied four after five innings of play. Then John Loughran, Mike Mosher and sophomore Pat Pesavento all singled to help give Notre Dame a 7-4 lead.

In the sixth, however, State cut the lead to 7-6 and proceeded to add two more in the seventh to edge the Irish 8-7.

In the second game of the twinbill, an awesome 22 hit attack sparked Notre Dame past Michigan State 20-11.

Yesterday, the Irish got behind early. After three and a half, Illinois-Chicago led 2-0.

Sophomore Tim Hurson scored on Ken Sono single to tie the game at two.

Sophomore Chris Flynn then doubled to drive in John Loughran to give Notre Dame a 4-2 lead, a lead it would never relinquish.

The advantage would become 10-2 when Notre Dame scored three more in the fifth and four in the sixth.

An insurance run was added in the seventh to make it 11-4 going into the top of the ninth.

The final inning jinx almost plagued the Irish again as the Flames notched five runs and had the bases loaded and the tying run on base. When Glenmon was called... see BASEBALL, page 7.

Women's basketball signs 2 prep players

Special to The Observer

The Notre Dame women's basketball team signed two high school seniors to letters of intent yesterday, bringing to three the total of recruits for the 86-87 season.

The first player signed is Anne-Schwarz a 6-2 forward from Gabriel Richard High School in Ann Arbor, Mich. Schwarz averaged 21 points and 10 rebounds last year and was named to the all-state first team. In addition the Detroit Free Press and Ann Arbor Journal both named Schwarz to their All-Metro Teams.

"Anne's biggest asset is her ability to rebound well offensively," said Irish head coach Mary DiStanislao. "She also has the agility and speed to fill the lane and pull up and hit the 17-foot jumper.

She complements our total program, and she is an outstanding student-athlete."

The other recruit signed is Julie Garske, a 5-10 swingman from Amherst High School in Amherst, Wis. Garske averaged 25 points and 13 rebounds in her senior campaign and was named to both the UPI and AP all-state first teams.

"Julie is an excellent shooter and a good passer," said DiStanislao. "She also has the ability to get up on the floor. She still has a lot to learn, but we think she will grow into our pro­gram."

DiStanislao also said that she got the best player in Wisconsin for the third year in a row (the first two were Sandy Botham and Heidi Bueske) to complete the back."

Schwartz and Garske will join Cathy Emiglo, who signed with the Irish during the November signing period, as next year's seniors, and Coach DiStanislao said that all three complement each other as well as the team's style of play."
