Apartheid reforms include scrapping laws says white government

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - The white government formally announced yesterday that it will make the most sweeping reforms in generations of apartheid by scrapping dozens of laws that restrict the movements of blacks. But it said blacks will still not be permitted to live in white residential areas.

Anti-apartheid leaders complained that the reforms, while welcome, do not address the fundamental problems of the country.

In another action, Justice Minister Michael Nel yesterday said that the government planned to introduce legislation to end the death penalty.

The government said a maximum of 245 prisoners were affected by the move.

On the other hand, the government said it would be free to move from one city or town to another seeking work but will be allowed to live only in authorized residential areas, not with the country's five million whites.

Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu, one of the country's best-known black leaders, cautioned blacks to be aware and informed of other legislation.

"Some of the influx control laws are being brought in to control the government policy statement," Said Tutu, who won the Nobel Peace Prize last month. "I have just been elected archbishop of Cape Town."

The government said it was morose, a spokesman for the anti-apartheid United Democratic Front coalition, said.

"For this reason, we want to make the public opinion aware of this campaign which is staged by the American Administration," he said.

When asked what sort of attacks would be launched, Sharafeddin replied: "Operations similar to the West Berlin nightclub bombing."

An American sergeant and a Turkish woman were killed in the nightclub bombing April 5 and 300 people were injured, 83 of them Americans. The United States says the attacks were planned by Libya.

Sharafeddin was asked how many attacks there would be and replied: "You may ask Mossad and American intelligence. They know the number."

Earlier yesterday evening, the information minister told foreign journalists they must leave the country by the end of the week.

About 250 foreigners were admitted to the North African country after the U.S. announced April 15 on Tripoli and Benghazi. They were kept in one hotel, taken on carefully guided tours and shown what Khadafi wanted them to see.

"Your mission is over," Sharafeddin told the journalists. "I have no more tours were needed."

The government ordered the hotel space.

He denied statements by other officials that the expulsions were ordered in retaliation for actions by Western governments against Libya.

Administration, Congress divided over budget-balancing restrictions

WASHINGTON - The Reagan administration clashed with Congress yesterday in a Supreme Court confrontation over the validity of the law that requires a balanced budget by 1991.

Under brisk questioning from the justices, both sides engaged in a highly technical debate with far-reaching practical consequences.

Charles Fried, the administration's top courtroom lawyer, challenged the central provision of the law - the Gramm-Rudman Act - that empowers the comptroller general to determine required levels of deficit reduction.

"Here we have an officer who gives orders to the president," said Fried. "These powers are entirely novel."

He argued that the role of the comptroller general is unlawful because he performs executive functions under Gramm-Rudman but may not be fired by the president.

"This grant of authority violates the Constitution," Fried said.

Several justices suggested the comptroller general is actually a legislative officer, not an independent agent.

The court, expediting considerations of the dispute, is expected to announce its decision by early July.

Finally, someone has come up with ways to help you get through college.

Traditional Events Commissioner Lisa Lawler said next year's Fall Fest is scheduled for Sept. 24-25. Tentative events include volleyball tournaments, an international dinner, a band performance and the carnival at Saint Mary's for next year.

She said Founders Day will be held Oct. 14, and the Christmas Bazaar is scheduled for Dec. 8-12. Lawler also said she is excited about planning a possible winter carnival at Saint Mary's for next year.

Vice-President for Student Affairs Sarah Cook said planned events should be considered in terms of probable student response.

"When planning events, we have to honest with ourselves. Will this really go over with the students?" she asked.

The board's meeting was held at Haggar College Center.

What do the Great Hall in O'Shaughnessy, the front of the library, Lewis Hall courtyard and chapel, Sacred Heart Church, Morau Seminar, O'Shaughnessy courtyard and many other areas at Notre Dame have in common with the major museum in the world? All these locations contain works of the renowned Yugoslavian sculptor Ivan Mestrovic who actually worked and taught at this University for the last eight years of his life. Few students seem aware of the contributions this great man and exceptional artist made to the world and to Notre Dame. From his personal crusade against the evils of communism in his own country, Croatia (later to become Yugoslavia), to the work ethic he taught his dedication to his art, to his inherent spirituality, Mestrovic is an example for all.

Ivan Mestrovic was born in Vrpolje in present-day Yugoslavia on August 15, 1883. His father had been a stone mason as a young man and Ivan first became interested in sculpture by observing his work. From an early age, while tending sheep, Ivan make wood and stone carvings and taught himself to read and write from the Bible, becoming the only literate person in his village. At fifteen he was apprenticed to a stonecutter and less than a year later, through the influence of his personal crusade against the evils of communism in his own country, Croatia (later to become Yugoslavia), to the work ethic he taught his dedication to his art, to his inherent spirituality, Mestrovic is an example for all.

From his first exhibit in Vienna, Mestrovic became regarded as a revolutionary in art. After four years at the Academy his images of the people and the legendary figures of Croatia and the Bible had not changed much. However, succeeding exhibits marked Mestrovic as a leading nationalist since his work served to inspire his people in their fight for emancipation from the Austro-Hungarian empire. Although Mestrovic was now identified as a political figure and had joined the radical Vienna Secessionists, he never neglected his work. Experimenting in a more impressionistic style and creating a large number of portraits, figurals groups and nudes, he exhibited throughout Europe and achieved international recognition. In fact, at this time he became acquainted with the world renowned August Rodin who proclaimed Mestrovic "the greatest phenomenon amongst the sculptors."

Threatened with imminent arrest at the outbreak of WWI because of his efforts in the fight for a unified and independent Yugoslavia, Mestrovic fled to Italy. At the end of the war the formation of a Yugoslav ruled by the dictator King Alexander I, was not the solution Mestrovic had dreamed of. Consequently he refused election to any office in the new government and continued his work in veritable seclusion.

By the onset of World War II Mestrovic was so well known that he received a personal summons from Hitler. In refusing it he was reported to have said, "I am a little man in a little studio in a little province, but I don't have to shake hands with a murderer." Whether or not this story is correct he was arrested soon after his refusal and only released as a result of Vatican intervention. He spent the rest of the war as a refugee in Switzerland, as any return to his homeland was frustrated by the presence of Tito's communism, which had succeeded Fascism in Yugoslavia. Shortly after the war he accepted several religious commissions in Rome but in 1947 moved on to America.

In the United States Mestrovic first accepted a professorship at Syracuse University but as his work at this time was almost entirely devoted to the portrayal of religious figures and portraits he was disappointed in the non-spiritual atmosphere of the school. So when the Rev. Anthony J. Lauck, C.S.C suggested that the religious setting of Notre Dame be more conducive to his kind of work, he was extremely amenable to the idea. In September of 1955, following Fr. Hesburgh's offer of an extensive studio and a Distinguished Professorship, Ivan Mestrovic came to Notre Dame.

The students called him "Maestro" and had a deep admiration for this short, bearded man. He taught in the Old World tradition, giving critiques of their work as he continued with his own. Professor Robert Lauck had joined the staff of the Art Department shortly before Mestrovic's arrival and offered several insights into his role here at Notre Dame. It seems that Mestrovic was adamant about a successful work of art needing no explanation. He reiterated this fact to his students on one occasion at the expense of an influential visitor. The woman purportedly pointed to a recently completed sculpture and said, "Tell us about this one Maestro." He replied, "Madame, I have spent the last six months telling you about this one!" According to Professor Leader, the greatest contribution he made to this University was his instruction, primarily by example, in the success achieved by dedication to the task at hand and never-ending hard work. He worked harder and longer than any student on campus and at age 73 was more than twice their age. In his work he set a standard of excellence for students and professors alike and helped establish art as a respected profession.

Many of Mestrovic's sculptures around the Notre Dame campus have curious histories concerning their construction or acquisition. One such sculpture, Christ and the Samaritan Woman (in the O'Shaughnessy sculpture courtyard) was sent to the studio of the Maestro here at Notre Dame but was shipped to Rome to be bronzed. By explicit directions, on the return trip the bow was tied to the bow of the ship so that the new bronze could attain the natural green coloring produced by salt water.

Another more famous sculpture, the Pietà in Sacred Heart Church was originally conceived after the war in Rome, proceeded to reside in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and finally came to Notre Dame openly exposed on a float to the amazement of other motorists. Mestrovic was once offered $150,000 for this same piece in 1955 by Marshall Tito but preferred not to give any demonstration of support to the communist regime. There are quite a few other interesting examples of his work on campus as well, many of which are consolidated in his old studio (now a gallery of the Snite Museum).

Ivan Mestrovic worked until January 16, 1962 when he fell ill in his studio and died later the same day. However, the spirit of Mestrovic is still alive at Notre Dame, as he once said, "Our works in this world are the impressions left by the wings of our souls, which though they are not eternal are the impress of an eternal being." It is especially important to be aware of this outstanding man as he made a lasting imprint, not only on Notre Dame but on the world, in the words of Ante Tresic, a Croatian writer, "Mestrovic is not only a great artist but a very profound thinker. He is Protes in everlasting evolution, always the same, yet always different, like the time and ambient atmosphere in which he works. He tries to express all the sentiments we share not only of his nation, but of all humanity. He belongs not only to one nation but to all nations and all times."

Irish baseball breaks losing streak

By BOB GORDON
Sports Writer

The Irish baseball team entered yesterday's action riding an eight-game losing streak. The most recent loss an 18-0 thrashing, featuring nine Irish errors. Pitcher Mike Pesavento gunned down a trying Shields home. After an inning-strikeout by Rich Vanshoort, the Irish and Falcons were deadlocked at three.

At the top of the seventh, Chenail gave way to relief pitcher Mike Harmon, who was the eventual tough luck loser. Harmon, now 3-3, gave a gutsy performance with help from leftfielder Pat Pesavento.

Pesavento gunned down a trying to tag up from third with the go-ahead run. Pesavento was also a mainstay on the bases with two extra-inning hits, but he did just that stay as Irish bats failed to Harmon's only mistake was a lethal one, a one-out homer to Falcons Rich Welch. Bowling Green tuschi Green pitcher Steve Hiffman got the victory. Harmon's 4 1/3 scores in innings string ended as did the game.

The loss was especially frustrating to Notre Dame head coach Larry Gallo, who said, "I really hurt because we had our opportunities." In the nightcap, the Irish took out ALL that frustration on Bowling Green, pounding them 15-4.

Shields and Pesavento led the outing with four and three hits respectively, as two of Shields' hits were homers.

Irish pitcher Mark Wattzke courted the distance as Falcons left-fielder Jeff Hook served up six runs in only one inning. For his one timing of "work", Hook got earned the loss, before getting the book.

Notre Dame scored early and often with three in the first, four in these three productive innings, Shields, with five RBIs, in the game, wrapped three hits and two runs scored. Pesavento and Norm Diebel each had two hits and two runs scored, and Tom Guielle third twice after being hit by pitch and then singling.

Tom Shields put a fitting exclamation point in breaking the losing streak with his second homer in 16-2. The Falcons were deadlocked at three.

Kevin Dowen scored an unassisted goal 1:07 into overtime, lifting the Hartford Whalers to a 2-1 victory over the Montreal Canadiens last time. The Adams Division series is tied at two games apiece. The fifth of the series will be played tomorrow night at Montreal.

Dineen picked the puck up in the neutral zone, stepped around defensive forward Robby Robinson and lifted a wrist shot over Canadiens goalie Patrick Roy.

Mark Moshier had scored a power-play goal with 7:38 remaining in regulation to tie the game for Montreal.

The Whalers scored first in the first period when a shot by Sylvain Turgeon from close range was partially deflected by Roy and stuffed into the net by Stewart.

Two other series with surprising results so far continue tonight, with Edmonton at Calgary and St. Louis at Toronto.
Physical play intensifies in Women's Bookstore

Referees started work yesterday in the quarterfinals of the Women's Bookstore Basketball Tournament – and not a round too soon, as moments of physical play increased with the level of competition. Advancing to the semis are We Weren't Cheerleaders in High School, Double Decker Oreo Cookie, Revenge of the Quintic, and The Almosts.

We Weren't Cheerleaders in High School continued its winning moments of physical play increased and not a round too soon, as Kate Henley, Regi Richter and Kara England. A fourth, Mimi Storen, went all the way to the finals with three of its five players. Marilu Brown, and freshman volleyball players Zanette Beare and Rochelle Holder. The Femmes, though, kept up with the Cookie. At one point late in the game, Cookie only led 15-13. In the end, however, Double Decker Oreo pulled ahead to win by a final score of 21-15.

Oreo Cookie balanced its scoring across the roster. Holder finished with seven, Benkowski with six and Brown with five. For the Femmes, dominating center Janet Shander turned in an excellent 9-of-12 performance.

The Almosts, the tournament's third seed, used superior team organization to defeat The Pacers, 21-14. The third seed was simply overpowering on the boards. Patti Miledi pulled down 15, Mary Ellen Miledi had 13 and Laura Gleason grabbed 11.

Most of The Pacers managed to work out a scheduling conflict with registration at Saint Mary's, but the game still began without Lisa McGrath. McGrath entered the competition about 15 minutes into the game as the Pacers were trailing 8-3. Jens Hart's six points and ten rebounds led the Pacers. Eight points from Gleason carried The Almosts.

The final four remaining teams report at day tomorrow before beginning the semifinals on Saturday We Weren't Cheerleaders in High School will take on Double Decker Oreo Cookie, and Revenge of the Quintic play The Almosts at 5 Sunday on the Stepan courts.
Golfers expect a fight with tough Ohio teams

After spending last weekend in Columbus, the men's golf team will once again return to Ohio. This weekend's site will be in Kent, Ohio where the Irish will participate in the 13th annual Kent St. invitational, as Ball St., Miami of Ohio, N. Illinois, Ohio and Kent St. are all ranked in the top 10. Windmill Laken Golf Club will be the site of the tournament, with the format calling for 36 holes Friday, and Saturday and the 19th, before starting play Saturday at 8:00 a.m. They will be paired with tournament favorite Kent St.

Notre Dame coach Noel O'Sullivan says his squad is looking forward to a stiff challenge this weekend, as the team will be making its first appearance in the annual tournament.

"We are very hopeful that this will be a good tournament for us, we need to improve upon last week's finish," O'Sullivan says. "I know we can win this tournament, whether we do or not of course, remains to be seen. Looking at it realistically, I would be happy with at least a top three placement. That would be a real compliment for the team."

The Irish hopes for a top finish will ultimately depend on the character of the team. From the ranks emerges one person who exemplifies the word, character. According to O'Sullivan, senior Lon Huffman has exhibited this trait, especially over the last three weeks.

"Lon has been hitting the best, by far, lately," says O'Sullivan. "He has been our number one guy in the last two tournaments we have been in, and in my eyes he has played very impressively."

O'Sullivan also noted that sophomore Richard Connolly could be a pleasant surprise in the tournament.

"Rich is capable of shooting good rounds, which we would most certainly like to see him get, so I think he could be a big factor in us doing well this weekend."

Naturally, the other members of the team will have to pull their own weight if the club has any illusions of finishing first. But, there is little doubt in O'Sullivan's mind that they can win the whole thing.

"I know we can win this tournament, whether we do or not of course, remains to be seen. Looking at it realistically, I would be happy with at least a top three placement. That would be a real compliment for the team."

In the slam dunk contest, Peters used an air toss-bounce-slam move to please not only the judges but the crowd for the win. Despite his lack of size, David Rivers used impressive leaping ability to impress above the rim for second place. Peter Hebert finished third with a solid array of slams.

At the nine foot level, Buscher twirled through a 360-degree leap from the boards to take first. Mike Shimota placed second and Mike Moore third to round out the short man's division. Unfortunately, the crowd was appeased by only one baseline slam by Ken Barlow, as both Barlow and Donald Royal declined the cheers of the gallery...

The Daily Crossword

"OK, let's take a look at you."
The Bookstore XV Sweet Sixteen offered some intense battles yesterday as survival of the fittest narrowed the field to eight teams. The Bookstore courts also witnessed the high-flying slam dunk competition, producing some surprises with Jeff Peters garnering the 10-foot category, and John Buscher slamming for first from nine feet.

With the advent of referees for the third day, perhaps the most controversial game was The Embarrassing Stains' 21-18 victory over Mr. Coffey and the Non-Dairy Creamers.

Tim Kempton's 9-of-21 with 12 rebounds, and Mike Kelly's 11 rebounds for the Stains overpowered Creamers' big men Pete Hebert and Dave McCuffey, 7-of-26, both gave fine performances in the losing effort. Tequila White Lightning outlasted a strong second half rally to defeat Tofu Chaka Khan, 21-16. Key free throw shooting and defensive play by Sean Cullinan, 8-of-14, resulted in a Crazy 21-17 victory. Crazy man Chris Perozek was the key performer shooting 5-of-9. Pit players Joe Price, 4-of-15, and Cedric Figaro, 6-of-6, were off, as Pit shot 13-of-49 from the field. "It was a very physical game in side, we used to run but were hindered by injuries," said Crazy guard Carlton West. "We will need a solid effort against the Fun Bunch in our next game."

The Fun Bunch Finals showed its intent on repeating as champions, downsing Bad Melon and the Fugitive Guys, 21-8. Steve Tracy, 5-of-11 with nine rebounds, and Greg Dingens, 5-of-6 with 10 rebounds dominated the boards, while the Fugitive Guys could not find the shooting mark, going 8-of-39 from the outside.

No team has demonstrated shooting prowess quite like WBBS with Ed Smerciak in the tournament characterized by inside play. WBBS shot 21-of-36 as a team with Kenny Scheermans was the WBBS high man with 6-of-9 in a quickly played contest which took 25 minutes.

Lee's BBQ Roundhouse grilled Shysters, 21-14, as Jim Dolan went 5-of-9 and Tom Antonini pulled down five rebounds. Shyster Dave Corrigan did the bulk of the shooting for his team, going 6-of-15.

Leone's Stalions won easily against Unidentified Grace Defenders, 21-10. Stalions players Bill Sullivan, 6-of-11 and five rebounds, and John Mordo, 4-of-6, paced the scoring as Mike O'Grady pulled down seven boards. The Defenders went 10-of-49 with Steve Takach taking a game high eight rebounds.

Our offensive line is supposed to create huge holes, but not the type that veteran Scannell, Plants, Doerger, and Perrino made with their impending graduations. Fortunately for the Irish, veteran starting guard Shawn Heffern does return to add some stability in the trenches.

This loss of depth, along with the new blocking assignments required by head coach Lou Holtz' new offensive system, has opened things up at every other position on the line but the right guard slot manned by Heffern. Still, the unit as a whole has responded well to the challenge and the holes have begun to fill.
