Man with shotgun is jailed

By MARY HEILMANN

Notre Dame Security confirmed Tuesday that a man possessing a sawed-off shotgun was arrested at the main gate Monday night. City officials identified the man as David J. Dutka, 19, of Goshen, Ind., according to a statement released Tuesday.

Dutka was held in the Saint Joseph County jail on charges of possessing a sawed-off shotgun and a minor in possession of alcohol, according to Deputy Bruce Martin of the Saint Joseph County jail booking department.

Security was called about 9:30 p.m. Monday after a gate officer noticed the "suspicious activity" of two men who had just entered campus in a car driven by Dutka, according to the statement.

The men had told the gate officer they were going to South Dining Hall. The officer, however, watched the pair drive past.

When Security officers approached Dutka in the Lyons Hall parking lot, he was standing alone next to his vehicle, the statement said. One of the officers also had seen another man walking toward Morisseys Hall. Dutka claimed that he was on campus to drop off a hitchhiker he had picked up in Goshen, the statement said. Dutka said he

A unanimous vote of approval was given to a proposal concerning changes in parietals at last night's Hall Presidents' Council meeting.

The proposal, presented by Senate Committee on Parietals Chairman Brian Holst, would then need the approval of Vice President for Student Affairs Father David Tyson for it to become official policy.

"Extending visitation to 12:30 on Sunday evenings makes parietals more consistent with curfews," Holst said, noting that many dorms celebrate Sunday mass late in the evening.

"Felt also said the proposal is concerned with lessening the penalties of parietals violations. He emphasized that the senate committee "maintains that breaking parietals is still a serious violation," but considers the penalty of suspension for overnight parietals violations unnecessary.

The senate committee is seeking an amendment to du Lac, Holst said. "The proposed change lessens the possibility of suspension for a first-time offender, but still gives the University the prerogative to suspend or dismiss an offender who already has a record of parietals violations or who repeatedly disregards regulations concerning parietals," said Holst.

In other business, Judicial Council member Maria Cistron announced that anyone accused of a University offense can contact her for help and advice. Cistron said she has University permission to attend hearings, but cannot contact accused students. Students accused of a University offense, Cistron said, must get in touch with her if they want advice.

HPC Chairman Joanne Cathill said all halls were represented at a special HPC meeting Monday with Associate Vice President for Residence Life John Goldrick. She said a special committee meeting with Goldrick will be

McBrien criticizes Curran's removal

By CLIFF STEVENS

Assistant News Editor

The recent Vatican removal of a Catholic University theologian's teaching post would be "egregiously unfair," according to Father Richard McBrien, chairman of the theology department.

McBrien said a move like the ban against Father Charles Curran's teaching at Catholic University in Washington, D.C., could not be repeated here because Notre Dame is independently owned and operated under a lay board of trustees and subject to state law and rules of accreditation.

Citing Catholic University's "long status as a Vatican-chartered American university," McBrien said Curran's removal was motivated by his "vulgarization" to Vatican control.

"If Curran were at Notre Dame, they couldn't have gotten him at all," said McBrien. "They could have censored him, they could have censored him, but he still be teaching." Curran, a critic of the Church's positions on political and social issues, is considered to be less than socially acceptable to the existing power structure at Catholic University.

"An institution can't be a true university that's subject to the control of people outside it," McBrien said. "You can't do that and still have a university." He said Curran's removal "encourages the idea that not all Catholics will admit any claim that Catholic University is

CLC meeting is closed to public

By MARK PANKOWSKI

News Editor

Citing the need for open discussion of three parietals proposals, Student Body President Bruce Lohman shut down future CLC meetings council members.

"I'm going to talk to the rec­ tors at this meeting," Switek said. "More than likely future CLC meetings will be open to the public.

Last year, the CLC voted to prohibit The Observer from reporting which way individual members voted on proposals.

Besides the possibility of closing future meetings, Switek said the only proposals to be discussed are the changes in the parietals policy.

The proposals would extend Sunday visitation hours to 12:30 a.m., push back morning visitation hours to 10 a.m., and reduce the penalty for overnight parietals violations.

Switek said he'd discuss whether or not to close future CLC meetings with council members today.

The proposal would then add, "Repeated violations of University rules and regulations may result in suspension or dismissal.

The proposal states that this change would lessen the possibility of suspension for a first-time offender, but still allow the University the prerogative to suspend or dismiss an offender who already has a poor record or who repeatedly disregards the regulations concerning parietals.

Members debated a similar proposal brought by Lohman last spring but took no action on it.
Intelligence service is vital to the safety of United States

When people think of the CIA, many different images pop into their minds. Some imagine a foreign intelligence gathering unit, others it is portrayed in spy novels: men wearing dark glasses and trench coats chasing Russian spys. Others see the CIA operating on the front lines of the battlefield for freedom, protecting the United States from threats from Communists, San-danistas, and Muammar Kaddafi.

I came face to face with the CIA yesterday. No, I was not a spy on the backdoors of a car and interrogated nor was I making a secret “drop” at the darkened corner of a park. That hypothetical confrontation came at my request in the basement of Memorial Library. The purpose: to get a job with the CIA which is now recruiting on campus at the Career and Placement Center.

The interview, like any other, began with a quick handshake and a long walk down a hallway to the interviewing room. Once inside with the door tightly closed, I half-expect the man in the plaid jacket to pull out a polygraph machine to make sure I was who I said I was.

Halfway through the interview the man stated that he thought I should consider becoming a spy. I said I would think about it. With literature in hand and a ticket to gain entrance to the CIA exam on November 1, I expect to keep the room. My final contact with the CIA was over.

When I told my friends I was interviewing with the CIA, one commented “I don’t believe it. Why would you want to work for an icky organization like the CIA?”

After reflecting on this deep and insightful question, I thought of several responses. My first inclination was to ask what was wrong with the CIA. I expected to hear a long list of CIA sins, from the assassination of foreign leaders to the overthrow of governments. Admittedly, the stories that abound about CIA activities do not reflect well upon the agency. What the CIA does seems horrible to some and honorable to others. How many of us wonder, for example, did you know that the CIA was involved in an attempt to assassinate Fidel Castro?

The truth is, many citizens believe that the CIA is no different from its Russian counterpart, the KGB. They believe that the CIA is hurting, not helping, the cause for world democracy by engag­ ing in activities such as spying, training subversives and staging covert operations like the so-called “cover” training of Contra rebels in Nicaragua. If the CIA was abolished, then the world would be a better place for democracy, they say. At times people forget the service the CIA provides for the well being of this society. An example was a report last week that intelligence had uncovered several terrorist plots to be carried out here in the United States. I sincerely believe that the CIA has helped to prevent the “United States by gathering information that led to the discovery of these plots.”

Another good example of CIA service is the development of sophisticated spy satellites that can monitor Soviet compliances with nuclear arms treaties.

In past years when the CIA was recruiting on campus, students had tried to prevent this “morally corrupt” organization from interviewing at a Catholic university. I would argue that these protesters have done a disservice to their country. Notre Dame is an ideal place for the recruitment of future CIA employees. Unlike other universities, Notre Dame puts a premium on instilling a moral character in its students. Values taught at Notre Dame are what the CIA needs.

Although I am not sure the CIA is for me, I hope other ND students decide to pursue a career with that agency and take with them some of the values instilled here at Notre Dame. Our future safety may rest on these students and the intelligence they gather.

is a "serious university." McBrien said that most Catholic theologians, like Curran, disagree with the Vatican prohibition on artificial birth control.

"You will find only a tiny minority of Catholic theologians and a tiny majority of Catholic lay people who agree with the Vatican prohibitions," he said. McBrien also cited a commission established by Pope John XXIII in the early 1960s that recommended, by a two-thirds majority, to change the Church position on artificial birth control - a recommendation the pope subsequently chose not to follow.

McBrien also said that none of Curran's dissenting positions, including disagreement with the Church on artificial birth control, involve "infallible" Church teaching, and are therefore open to dissent.

had agreed to take the man to Notre Dame in exchange for a beer.

Dutka said the man identified himself as Will Cavannaugh, according to the statement. There is no student by that name in the Notre Dame phone directory.

After officers searched unsuccessfully for Dutka's passenger, Dutka offered to produce the man's phone number, which he said was in his car.

When Dutka reached into his car, Assistant Director of Notre Dame Security, Phillip Johnson, noticed what appeared to be a short shotgun on the floor of the car, the statement said. The shotgun, a Sears model 20-gauge single shot, was properly covered and was loaded with a single cartridge.

Security officers immediately removed Dutka from the car, searched and handcuffed him. Dutka was then taken to the Saint Joseph County jail.

The passenger in Dutka's car had not yet been found as of late Tuesday night, according to Res.

Doctrines considered "infallible" by the Church include the Trinity.

Theology professor Father Matthew Miceli, who supports the Church teaching on artificial birth control, said popular disagreement with the Church teaching, if such exists, does not make artificial control morally correct.

"Even if everyone was against it, that does not make it right," he said. "Morality is not deter-ned by votes."

Miceli said Curran's right to dissent included discussing his positions with colleagues and writing books, but said theologians at universities char-terized by the papacy like Catholic University should teach the Church position on controversial matters in classrooms.

Again noting Catholic University's distinction as a Vatican-chartered school, he said Vatican control of private Catholic universities like Notre Dame is a different matter that "might come up later."

"I think that's what they are afraid of," said Miceli of Curran's defenders.

McBrien said recent Vatican moves against Seattle Archbishop Raymond Hunthausen are "particularly more volatile" than the Curran case.

Differing with the church on matters including the place of women in the church and sexual morality, Hunthausen revealed Sept. 3 that several of his powers had been transferred to an auxiliary bishop appointed by the Vatican.

Saying the Vatican "overplayed its hand," McBrien predicted much argument and discussion on the matter at next week's meetings of Bishops in Washington, D.C.

McBrien said these recent controversies are not out of step with history.

Authorities were interviewing Dutka at the jail Tuesday for further information on the other man's identity, according to Marin. Martin said Dutka is expected to appear in court some time today.

Openness must be stressed in student leader actions

The Campus Life Council will be meeting this afternoon in the Center for Continuing Education building to discuss three parietals proposals. The doors will be closed.

Student Body President Mike Switek has announced his decision to close the meeting to the public.

The council includes students, rectors and administrators. According to Switek, some members of the council might feel restrained if the meeting were open to the public. He said this action will improve the chances for free discussion on this controversial topic.

The benefits of this action do not outweigh the public’s right to know.

Past student government administrations have taken similar approaches when faced with controversial matters. Closing the doors to the public has led only to a loss of support from the student body. Students want accountability for the policies their leaders pursue. This cannot be done unless the meetings are open for public review.

At this meeting, the CLC could make a decision that would substantially affect all life. Students have the right to be present.

The spirit of openness which has characterized Switek and Student Body Vice President Don Montanaro’s political careers is jeopardized by this action.

The Observer believes Switek and Montanaro are sincere in wanting to keep their administration open to the students.

Attempting to demonstrate their openness to students, both leaders moved their desks outside on the quad Monday; however, keeping their meetings open to the public would be a much more effective demonstration of their openness.

Hungry and students benefitted from Rasta

Dear Editor:

As a proud graduate of Notre Dame, I was upset upon hearing of the decision to cancel the Haiti for Famine Starvation (RASTA) student group. Two years ago, I founded RASTA along with a close friend of mine, Sandi D’Ottavio. The group became much more than another charity organization working for African food relief. Through a series of campus lectures, movies, and educational activities which focused upon African history and culture as well as upon the tragic famine, RASTA generated a cultural and spiritual awareness of the relationship between human rights and the less fortunate people in famine-stricken Africa.

RASTA’s main event, the Spring Reggae Festival, was also a cultural affair which helped raise the consciousness level of the Notre Dame community. Through music, dance, and lectures during the concert, the crowd was reminded of the need to continue supporting African relief programs. A lot was known about the famine victims mixed in with shots of healthy residents from around the world. During the Intermission, RASTA members participated in a bread-breaking ceremony on stage in an effort to remind the audience of the real purpose of the concert.

The concert itself raised over $4,000 for African famine relief. Last year’s RASTA concert also successfully raised thousands of dollars for the victims of famine in Africa. It is unfortunate that such a valuable organization has become the victim of the administration’s decision-making process.

While I was aware of illegal alcohol consumption at the first RASTA concert, it was not greater than, for example, the level of alcohol consumption at the 1984 March Convenion. The March Convention, however, has not been cancelled as a student event.

In addition, as co-founder of RASTA, I helped organize an extensive student security force which actively maintained order during the concert. We were aware of the need to follow University regulations, and we did our best to promote order at the concert.

Last year, I returned to Notre Dame to attend the second annual RASTA festival. While I did notice alcohol being confiscated by security, once again, it was not any worse than at that of the March Convention or other student events such as pep rallies and S.Y.R. While I understand that illegal drugs were allowed and confiscated at last year’s concert, these were surely isolated occurrences. Neither I nor anyone else in my group of friends witnessed the use of drugs in Staglin Park. Even if students were caught with illegal drugs and/or alcohol, wouldn’t the prudent response have been to subject those individuals to disciplinary action instead of cancelling the entire event? The decision to cancel RASTA seems especially unfair in light of less serious measures - if any - taken against the Mock Convention, pep rallies, and S.Y.R. where University regulations were and continue to be broken.

When I founded RASTA, I did so with the intention that the group would exhibit cultural and spiritual ideals that make Notre Dame a great University. By the time I graduated, RASTA had grown to encompass dozens of students committed to the cause of ending hunger by promoting global justice. Hundreds of Notre Dame students benefitted from the money raised, and a movement had begun at Notre Dame which would have continued to generate a spiritual and cultural awareness among the Notre Dame student body.

There are many losers because of the decision to cancel RASTA. The administration took a group of students dedicated to the very values upon which Notre Dame was founded. The students lost a group which fostered an awareness that we have a moral obligation to aid those in need. The biggest losers, however, are the famine victims in Africa who will receive less food aid this year as a result of this cancellation.

Past student government administrations have taken similar approaches when faced with controversial matters. Closing the doors to the public.

Senior reflection groups help seniors evaluate years

Dear Editor:

For many students here at Notre Dame, college life is coming to an end. New pressures and new options seem to present themselves at every turn. Amid this flurry of questions is an opportunity for personal and spiritual reflection. This year, a group of students took advantage of this opportunity. "The timing was perfect," said Steve Fal­lon, a group member from last year. "I think what made our group so successful," said Mimi Graham, another member of the CSC coordinator of Senior Reflection Groups. "That's because they're not as busy as other groups, but at the same time, we had some really good arguments."

"What is the competitive edge here, people tend to overlook the deeper parts of themselves," said Ann Mary Roemer, the group's coordinator. "There's not enough coming together in a non-academic atmosphere on this campus. Tony Haske, a group member from last year, recalls, "It was a great way to get to know people that you never got a chance to meet."

"I think what made our group so successful," said mini Graham, another former member, "was that the people were so diverse. It made for great conversations. Everyone had their own opinion, including Professor (Steve) Fal­son and his wife. We all respected each other, but at the same time, we had some really good arguments."

The Senior Reflection Groups are as successful as the members want them to be. It's a great opportunity, says Roemer, "but it takes commitment, they'll get out what they put into it."

Second semester senior year is a period of many emotions, and over the years, many seniors have taken advantage of this opportunity. "The timing was perfect," says Graham. "We only had a nice break just to get away for while. I think in many cases it was even therapeutic."
Opinion

University must focus on alcohol awareness

Dear Editor,

I recently returned to the campus for the football season. It was a vastly improved game and was very surprising by the direction the University was heading. I believe in the “Notre Dame” family and the extent to which the University has the moral obligation to set standards for the Catholic community and the world, but the key is the setting of standards by the Catholic community, among the students.

The duty of a moral member of a community is to point out to others faults, and work towards a solution. The moral obligation to alter the moral wrong, real change does not occur throughout the community; it is the realization of the truth behind the moral inequity. The Impetus, then, of Notre Dame’s work towards altering a wrong should be in education, discussion and communication.

When I returned to the campus, I picked up an Observer and read an ad by the students of two dorms on campus pleading the administration to discuss some judgement involving two resident assistants. This was a signal, taking out ads to request discussion implies lack of communication. Then I discussed the incident with several students. Each student had a slightly different story, but all had knowledge of the incident and were more than willing to talk. I spoke to others. People tend to blow steam in the moment. For the sake of the similarities, there were plenty. This was a slightly different story, but all had knowledge of the incident and were more than willing to talk. I spoke to others. People tend to blow steam in the moment.

The students must require some discussion with the Administration. The alumni must encourage this move towards positive change.

The University of Notre Dame, has, by virtue of its religious foundations, a moral obligation to positive change in the world. The University of Notre Dame is through the graduates of the institution, the “Notre Dame” family. To legislate a moral without any duty to provide change and does not provide education. The University of Notre Dame has a moral responsibility to change. Thus, whatever comes from the “Notre Dame” family is called into question, regardless of its being accurate or not. The administration asks for a publicly represented narrative through the coup d’etat in 1973. Under a state of siege, “Louie, Louie” was the expression of varying opinions on campus, through letters, is encouraged.

Banning "Louie, Louie" is only the beginning

Last Saturday’s victory over Purdue was rather satisfying. Unfortunately, this situation was marred by the affect it had on the alcohol on the campus or rowdy students at the game. What was wrong was what was not there, “Louie, Louie.”

John Farley

Those of us with reasonably decent memories may recall that the band performed “Louie, Louie” at the Michigan game a while back. The然后, coach Lou Holtz during the halftime show. The performance received an enthusiastic response from the crowd that day. However, not everyone was smiling at the band’s performance.

A woman from Rockville, Maryland, witnessed the band’s performance and was shocked. Why? Were the trombones out of step? Did the trumpets miss a high note? No. The woman was dismayed because the lyrics of the song in the 1960’s referred to sexual intercourse.

Not one to innocently slay the morals of the Catholic youth of the nation who were being corrupted, the woman communicated her shock to Motre Dame’s president Fr. Ted Hesburgh.

Apparently, our president was equally sickened by the moral atrocity which was committed on national television. The song was sent from on high to Band Director James Phillips that the band could no longer play the immoral tune. Although undoubtedly this seemed a bit ridiculous to us, who currently people who even understand the lyrics of the song; he compiled and thus the haunting strains of “Louie Louie” were absent from the Irish victory over Purdue.

Second, who will pay for all of the counseling it will take to remove the image of a campus of alcohol warning from the heads of Notre Dame students? Who will pay for the counseling of students’ musical listening habits to weed out immoral music? I could see the case of “Louie, Louie” is just one incident. It is but a part of a national trend which is quite disturbing. The banning or outright ban and records because of morally offensive content is on the rise. Does this mean this? It means that a small group of small-minded people want to dictate what is good and what is bad. The frightening thing is that they get away with it and are asked to be advocates by acts such as the banning of “Louie, Louie” at Notre Dame.

Notre Dame and the world supports such ideas as freedom of speech and expression. When these rights are infringed upon, the group of bullies than-thous, action must be taken to protect our freedoms. Not one of us is sickened by the banning of “Louie, Louie” Incident is just a symptom of a national disease which is worse than almost any other. This disease kills a little part of all of us, our creativity.

"Can ya spare a few pence?"

Mark McGlaughlin
London Calling

Editor's note: Columns by two Notre Dame students currently enrolled in foreign studies programs will be alternating each week. Mark McGlaughlin is spending this semester abroad at the Institute of Arts and Letters’ London program. Mary Berger, whose column will debut next Wednesday, is a sophomore participating in the Angers, France foreign study program.

Well, while most of you reading this are probably at this very moment sampling some of the fine cuisine served up at the dining hall, we Londoners are eating in each corner and finding our space in that not so tidy kitchen in the West Two Hotel basement. There’s no “all you can eat” policy here. Most of us have lost weight. It’s not that we don’t have food, it’s expensive, though. Ham­burger goes for about $1.50 a pound. A two-litter bottle of coke costs $1.40. So you can buy a half liter for $0.75. That’s not too bad out somewhere like the Hard Rock (which will set you back at least $7.50), we don’t get tons of food to eat.

What’s amazing is that we can still manage to live on two pounds a day, that’s about three dollars at current exchange rates. That won’t buy you fish fillets, but it doesn’t mean porridge and oatmeal all the time either. It just takes a little bit of planning to make ends meet.

So why are there beggars? At just about every tube station on the Underground there are buskers, street musicians who play for money. There is a 50 pound fine for hawking or busking on the streets if they do it anyway. Most of them are bad enough players to deserve the fine. They earn only a few pence, or a pound if they’re lucky.

Twice now, while coming out of the Queenway station on my way home, I have been accorded the same 15-year-old girl. She’s usually dressed in a beat-up black jacket and some second-hand blouses and jeans combo. Apparently she does well at Queenway as many people from other parts of town come out to the various ethnic restaurants in the area. She’s had a different childminder when she was a baby, and her last name is linked to me—partners, I think, since she doesn’t look old enough to have been a ten-year-old child. Anyway, as a result she has a spare a few pence? To get the kids, you know.

The English press and many people refer to Britain as “the welfare state.” There is apparently a more extensive welfare system than in America, and medicine is specialized. So why are there still beggars? We have been told not to give money to beggars, “others will con­gregate around you if you give to one, they will know you have money,” organizers, emphasized this point. “Our goal has been to achieve unity and makes it the special place that it is. One does not belong in it. That rich tradition of the place. Notre Dame students in particular. This is definitely the most multicultural university I’ve ever dealt with, which is due to the tradition of the place. Notre Dame started out as a minority university aimed at educating its own people. That rich tradition continues today, which accounts for the homogenous nature of the students here. The percentage of foreign students may be small, but that just means it is up to us to give them a forum to tell their story. The Lori Rookee foreigners at standing in, not at standing out,” said Sandle.

Bells added that it is difficult to recognize the student sit­ting next to us in class is from another country with different cultural backgrounds. “The Multi­cultural Festival serves the pur­pose of celebrating the uniqueness of our own stu­dents.”

Lisa Boykin, one of the student organizers, emphasized this goal as well: “If this celebration could convey just one message, it would be the tremendous con­tribution that multiculturalism provides. This aspect of Notre Dame truly enhances our commu­nity and makes it the special place that it is. One does not need to travel abroad to discover the things that have been right here all along.”

What did you honestly think of the refs? I was astonished after the game. It sailed wide, and the Irish had a tie.

For McCourt, it lost its 13th goal of the season.

Lori and I were overcome, and both teams showed signs of exhaustion. The Irish had also trouble keeping possession of the ball, particularly with the excitement generated by the 13th-ranked team in the nation.

I told Randy (Morrison) to hit it to me with 30 seconds left on the clock.

"He hit it to me, and I shot, but the defender came out of the wall and surprised me because the ball usually stays up in the wall.

The Irish gained game took over, and a Zip forward got off with nothing inside the game. It sailed wide, and the Irish had a tie.

The Irish have a two-week break before they travel to ranked Connecticut on Oct. 11.

This weekend Saint Mary's soccer team had a loss and a win, bringing their record to 3-6. The Belles began the weekend with a loss to Wilmington College on Saturday, 7-3. The score was 5-1 at the half. The only Saint Mary's goal was scored by senior captain, Mary Anne Perri, with an assist from sophomore Ellen Boyle.

In the second half the Belles were able to get back in the game for a while behind goals length freshmen Caroline Knoll and Molly Meehan. "I was pleased to see the way we rallied in the second half," said Head Coach John Akers.

After the two goals, Wilmington became a little nervous. Wilmington was able to shut the Belles down, however, and scored two more goals and to win decisively 7-3.

One factor affecting play was the two large puddles on the slippery field that forced substitutions on both teams.

In addition, Saint Mary's played a well-respected team that includes two all-America players and a player recruited from Norway.

Wilmington plays host to the National Championships and is already in the final four.

Sunday the Belles had better luck with a 3-2 victory over the College of Mount Saint Joseph.

"We dominated most of the play," said Akers. "Junior Landry Clement showed a lot of strength and ability on both offense and defense.

Saint Mary's started early with a goal by senior captain Mary Anne Szweda, and freshmen Caroline Knoll and Molly Meehan will be ready to make Barb Zwickey (So how old does that make Barb Zacicky?)

Interhall soccer races tighten up as contenders eye playoff spots

By CHRIS PAULISON

Heading into the third and final week of regular season play, the MVA Interhall Soccer league boasts four heated divisional races.

The short five-game regular season schedule has caused a three-team traffic jam atop each of the four divisions. Of the two of the three teams currently vying for divisional titles will be selected for the playoffs, which will take place shortly after October break.

The South American Division's Alumni, undefeated after three games, sits ahead of Holy Cross A and Cavanaugh, who share 2-1-2 records. All three teams play each other on Sunday, with Holy Cross A and Cavanaugh meeting at noon, and Alumni vs. Holy Cross A at 2 p.m.

The North American Division's Zahm, who has had two of its three games decided by shootouts, sits atop the division with a 2-1-2 record. Holy Cross A and Cavanaugh have also compiled a perfect 4-0-0 record.

The European Division is the closest of all, with three teams competing for divisional titles: the Off-Campus Hoobers, the Spleiphs, and the Motre Dame Irish. Each team has won one of its three games decided by shootouts, with the Hoobers and Spleiphs each winning two.

In the Western European Division, the Off-Campus Hoobers have a good shot at a playoff showdown for the divisional title.

Behind a solid team effort, the Notre Dame soccer team tied 13th-ranked Akron, 1-1, yesterday.

The tie represents the biggest accomplishment for the team this season since the season-opening 1-0 victory over Wisconsin-Milwaukee.

"I'm happy with the way the guys played," said Head Coach Bob Knight. "They came out dragging in the first ten minutes," said Irish stopper John Guignon. "We were dragging too, but once we saw they were down, we started to pick it up. At that point, the Irish were never intimidated by the Zips, marking them closely on defense the first half."

Both teams had several good scoring opportunities in the first half, but neither team could score. Notre Dame's best chance came on a volley by forward Bruce "Tiger" McCullough, which saved by Zips keeper David Zupko.

Notre Dame kept the pressure on in the second half with several offensive attacks. One limiting pass was deflected just wide of a goal by an Akron defender.

Both teams had several good scoring opportunities in the first half, but neither team could score. Notre Dame's best chance came on a volley by forward Bruce "Tiger" McCullough, which saved by Zips keeper David Zupko.

"I'm happy with the way the guys played," said Head Coach Bob Knight. "They came out dragging in the first ten minutes," said Irish stopper John Guignon. "We were dragging too, but once we saw they were down, we started to pick it up. At that point, the Irish were never intimidated by the Zips, marking them closely on defense the first half."
