Professor evaluates arms negotiations, summit hopes

By MICHELLE DALL
News Staff

The recent arms treaty negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union could lead to a major political and psychological breakthrough in political relations, said Professor Robert Johnson of Notre Dame's Institute for National Peace Studies.

"Militarily, the arms reductions are not very significant, since only about three percent of the United States' and the Soviet Union's total supply of warheads are being cut back," Johnson said.

"The reductions are politically and psychologically significant, however, because, for the first time, the superpowers are following through on a plan to dismantle nuclear weapons. This may well be the first step to more inter-continental agreements," he said.

The current negotiations also reflect a new willingness on the part of the Soviet Union to include intrusive inspections, which would ensure that the treaty is honored. In the past, the Soviets have refused to allow on-site inspections of Russian factories and laboratories. Johnson believes that the Soviets have recently become "tired of looking like the bad guys." He added that the Soviets are also realizing that the U.S., being the more technologically advanced country, could have more to hide than they do themselves.

To date, the U.S.S.R. has made the most concessions in the arms negotiations, according to Johnson. Most Soviet missiles being dismantled are equipped with three nuclear warheads, while each U.S. missile typically contains one warhead. Thus, the Soviets are reducing about 10,000 warheads, while the U.S. is cutting back approximately 600.

Johnson says he is virtually certain that the arms treaty negotiations will lead to a summit meeting between President Reagan and Soviet Secretary General Gorbachev. He said that Gorbachev will probably see ARMS, page 4.

Biden has 'learned a lesson'

He described his withdrawal speech as "relatively hard to do" and acknowledged having second thoughts.

Whoever’s soaping up Stonehenge is all wet

The autumn equinox quietly passed us by a couple of days ago. The only people interested in this obscure event are astronomers and Druids, I think. Stonehenge, of course, is another story. Astronomers and Druids like it, but so does everyone else. Students seem to be very interested in the fountain, judging from the numbers who use it for either a sunbathing platform or a quick shower.

Will someone please explain why soap keeps appearing in the fountain? As a Druid (yes, I’ll admit it), I have divine access to the plans for Notre Dame’s version of Stonehenge. There is a filtering system underneath Nieuwland. There is a holding tank somewhere under the grass of the Fieldhouse Mall. Nowhere in the plans, however, is a soap insertion valve.

So where is the soap coming from?

Could there be soap mines or soap trees or soap bugs or something like that eating its way through the water? Perhaps it’s not really soap. Maybe the pipeline between North and South Dining Hall through which leftover food is pumped accidentally connected up with the fountain. Think about it - our stomachs can handle hydrochloric acid but they have no idea with dining hall food. What chance does granite have? I don’t think those limestone pillars and granite flooring could stand up to whatever is in leftover dining hall food.

The connection between the continual soap in the fountain and the sudden green color that appeared in the reflecting pool by the Hesburgh Library. I can’t think of any reason the two should be connected except that I can’t explain either one.

Dennis, you’re on the Radiant Lab! I remember about two years ago some construction crew came and put a huge hole on the north side of the building, and then after a couple of months they filled it all back up. Maybe they were making some modifications in the steam tunnel pipes. Maybe there’s a Top Secret Fusion Reactor or some of those pesky alien bodies in the building and the government is pumping all the sewage into the campus monuments and lakes. That would explain why all those dead fish appear in St. Mary’s Lake every spring, too.

I see in the Personal section that the New York Mets are being called “Pond Scum” by what I presume are unintelligent or perhaps jealous Cardinal fans. Perhaps the soap is really the Mets resting up between three-game series at Pittsburgh and Montreal. I don’t know why they’d choose to stay here, though, what with the unfavorable press and all.

Actually, though, I bet it’s one of those student pranksters. You know, two bottles of concentrated Tide, pour them in the fountain, ha ha. “Gee, Beaver, maybe it’ll make a three foot high foam mountain like what happened to Cindy on the Brady Bunch once. He he he!”

Give me a break. Once is funny. Twice is putting it. Four times? And every time it happens, someone has to go turn off the fountain and these poor schleps have to scrub the whole thing down and attempt to get all the soap out. And if it keeps happening, we all know that one day it will be turned off for good. Many of us know what Stonehenge is like without water. Maintenance turns off the interior lights and turns on those white fluorescent things that were borrowed from the Washington Monument. Stonehenge will look like a landing spot for extraterrestrials. Besides, if they turn off the water, that wonderful waterfall sound that I can hear from my window will go away.

Mention Notre Dame football to nearly any gridiron-crazy alumnus and your typical response will be something like this: “Ah, the Fighting Irish. Think of the tradition.”

Knute Rockne... Knute Rockne, the undisputed leading man of Notre Dame football. His record over 13 seasons of coaching Notre Dame football was an incomparable 105-12-5, an .881 winning percentage. The teams that made Knute Rockne a legend not only put Notre Dame football in the national spotlight, but also made South Bend the center of the university for college football.

Only Rockne’s name could overshadow those of George Gipp and the Four Horsemen during the years 1918-1929. He coached five teams to undefeated seasons and won Notre Dame’s first bowl game, the 1924 Rose Bowl, 27-10 over Stanford.

Many have heard of the locker room speech Rockne gave his players, encouraging his boys to “win one for the Gipper.” The story of that famous line revolves around George Gipp, the prolific running back of the Irish.

In the middle of the 1929 football season, Gipp contracted strep throat and died from complications of the disease, of which little was known early in the 20th century. Knute Rockne was at Gipp’s deathbed when the young running back uttered his last wish. “When things are wrong and the breaks are beating the boys, tell them to go in there with all they’ve got and win just one for the Gipper.”

Rockne told his squad that moving speech just before a game with Army, at Yankee Stadium in 1928. The Irish had lost two of their first three games in 1928, Rockne’s worst year as a head coach. A murderous schedule faced the Irish after they visited the nationally-ranked Cadets, and the Irish needed a win to gain some momentum. The Irish rallied for a 13-6 win, scoring two second-half touchdowns and holding Army on the Notre Dame one-yard line as time ran out. It was arguably the most emotional win in Notre Dame history.

Gipp, however, would have made his name in history even if he hadn’t uttered those famous last words. During his career at Notre Dame, the Irish compiled a 27-3-3 record, including a 19-0-1 mark in his last 20 games. He was Rockne’s most versatile player—he punted, passed and ran with the best in the country, and is considered by many to be the greatest all-around player in college football history.

Rockne’s teams never had a losing season and in 1929, his squad went undefeated without playing a single home game because of the building of Notre Dame Stadium. It was fitting that in 1930, his last season, Notre Dame was the nation’s number one team in the final AP Poll.

In 1930, Rockne died of pneumonia, his team’s record of 10-0-1 shortly after the season ended. He was replaced by his assistant coach, Ewing Haggerty, who had been with Rockne since his days as a student-athlete at Notre Dame.

Irish free safety

Southall adjusts to change

Nobody has to tell Corny Southall how much things can change. He is an expert on the subject.

Notre Dame’s starting free safety has made his share of adjustments, including a daily switch from his off-field personality to his on-field personality, and two position changes in the last two years.

Positioning the normally quiet Southall at free safety, where he must call out the defensive signals as the opponents line up, presents a clash of styles.

“Normally, I tend to keep to myself,” says the junior management major. “I like that. I’m a quiet person most of the time. I like to watch a good movie and just do anything relaxing.”

“I don’t like people being in my business and I don’t tend to get into other people’s business.”

Southall is a shock to the Notre Dame gridiron-crazy alumni and your typical response will be something like this: “Ah, the Fighting Irish. Think of the tradition.”

“Every school that recruited me, except Notre Dame and a few others, wanted me for defensive back,” says Southall. “When things are wrong and the breaks are beating the boys, tell them to go in there with all they’ve got and win just one for the Gipper.”

Strickland: Purdue's Superman

By DOUG GRIFFITHS
Purdue Exponent

Purdue middle linebacker Fred Strickland is the Superman of the Purdue defense. Off the field it is his "mild-mannered" approach that is noticeable, but on the line of the field "tooth as steel" antics have earned him the respect of his teammates and opponents.

"I think he's a lot more aggressive on the field." Boiler defensive coordinator and lineback coach Phil Bennett says. "He's a mild-mannered type of kid (off the field) with me. But when he gets on the field, he has not just a ferocious attitude. He is a biter, and he's not afraid to stick his face in there."

In contrast to Bennett's comments, Strickland says he tries to stay the same mellow person on and off the field.

"I try to get the team to react in certain situations." he says. "I try to calm them down in pressure situations. I joke around with them, try to talk them down. Even off the field when I'm around my friends I try to kid around and have a good time.

"I like to just sit around and listen to rap music and hang out. This season I want to be by myself more than the year before because you're young and you things go through your mind."

Athough Strickland likes to relax in his spare time, he was anxious to get started this fall with football. His entire season was cut off by an injury that kept him off the field during the Rockne years. Since he missed the first part of fall practice, he has had to play catch-up and it hasn't been easy.

"It did set him back and it hurt him a lot," Bennett says. "I think he's getting better, but he's still not where I'd like him to be at this point."

Because of spring practice, Strickland says his early absence did not hurt him in learning the new defense, but it did in the conditioning aspect.

"I think that my technique may have been affected slightly, but I think that the only thing that hurt me was my conditioning."

Even though he got a late start, he hasn't seemed to affect his play on the field. As a second-team all Big Ten selection in 1986, Strickland led the Boilers in tackles ranked second in the conference in tackles - for the second-straight season. Currently Strickland has 21 tackles (19 unassisted) and has caused a fumble and recovered it. He needs 111 solos to become Purdue's all-time leader.

With those kind of statistics, Bennett says "Fred has the possibility to be one of the best or the best linebackers that has ever been through here. He's intelligent and a good hitter. He runs well, and he's intense about what he does."

Boiler head coach Fred Akers said Strickland is one on the top linebackers around. He could play linebacker for anyone.

"I like the hitting the most," he says. "I like to get a good solid hit on a running back, a quarterback or even a lineman. I like letting him know I'm not just here to be playing linebacker for anyone."

Playing on both sides of the ball (high school (tailback, fullback and out-side linebacker) Strickland had the opportunity to be a linebacker position because of the opportunities it could present him.

"I like the hitting the most," he says. "I like to get a good solid hit on a running back, a quarterback or even a lineman. I like letting him know I'm not just here to be playing linebacker for anyone."

"I like running the ball a lot, but I just felt playing the defense (would allow me to have a longer football career.)"

"If a pro career comes around I'd like to get a shot at it," he says. "And if not, then I'll finish school and go on and get my degree."

in the United States and they tell you that you can play running back in college, you get spoiled.

"You start thinking 'yeah, I can play running back, and junior and senior year I can run for the team.' A lot of things go through your mind because you're young and you don't know what college is all about."

Southall backed up Allen Pinkett, Hiawatha Francisco and Ray Carter as a freshman and earned his starting position last fall. He had came his first position change. With new Head Coach Lou Holtz the position change was switched to strong safety.

"At first it was a shock," he recalls. "I had been playing of fense all through spring ball. Then coming into fall camp they switched me all of a sudden to defense and that shocked me."

Forbes says the coaching staff saw an area of need, and found Southall to be the most likely candidate for the switch.

"We really had a need in the secondary," says Forbes. "We felt that he would give Corny the best opportunity to play and it would plug up a whole for us."

"As it turned out, it has been a great boost for Notre Dame, and for Corny individually."

So last season, Southall backed up hardly Wells and Greg Streeter at strong safety, making four tackles against LEU in his longest stint.

Last spring he had another surprising. The graduation of Steve Lawrence and James Bobbi left the safety position open. Southall was called upon to change his course.

"It was another adjustment for me," Southall says. "I knew the whole offensive scheme (freshman year) so learning an adjustment at Michigan last year, this year, I've had to add learning a new position to Southall's responsibilities, which marked the only time one two interceptions at Michigan were shut out twice in the same year. But for the most part, Notre Dame football was a dream during the Rockne years. His teams produced three All-Americans. Four of these went down in history, largely because of a passage in the New York Herald-Tribune written by a then little-known sportswriter named Grantland Rice.

"Outlined against a blue, gray October sky the Four Horsemen rode again. In dramatic lore they are known as a number of things: attraction, pestilence, destruction, and death. These are only their aliases. Their real names are (Harry) Stodolrhe, (Don) Miller, (Jim) Crowley, and (Elmer) Layden."

None of the four was taller than six feet and none weighed more than 162. Yet in the 30 games in which they played as a unit for the Irish, they only lost twice -- both to Nebraska. Theirs was the back field of the 1924 Rose Bowl win, and their reputation spread across the country in no time.

All four pressure position on the National Football Foundation Hall of Fame, and all four signed his players' equipment, and were the foremost innovators of the game and perhaps the greatest coach of all time.

"The aura of Knute Rockne extends beyond the football field as they pointed magnificum laude from Notre Dame, designed his players' equipment, and were the foremost innovators of the game and perhaps the greatest coach of all time.

A sturdier foundation could not have been laid down for the most successful program in college football.

The Rock and one of his charges. Rockne coach with most famous names in football - The Gipper and the Four Horsemen.
West Lafayette, Ind. — When intramural football and Notre Dame hook up Saturday at Ross-Ades Stadium, the Boiler band should play “Happy Birthday” instead of “Hail Purdue.” Both schools celebrate their football centennials this season. Fittingly, both bands find themselves in similar situations.

Fred Akers is in his first year as head coach of the Boilermakers. After a 10-year career at Texas where he coached the Longhorns to a combined 86-31-2 mark, Akers became Purdue’s 31st head coach. Boiler fans look for him to restore his squad to national prominence—a similar situation to Irish head coach Lou Holtz.

So far, it hasn’t been encouraging for the Boilermakers, who stand 0-1-1 on the season. They lost at Washington, 28-10, before opening at home last week against what figured to be an intragrade squad in Louisville, but it was anything but easy. After rallying from a 14-3 deficit, the Boilers lost a 22-22 tie.

The Boilers have been mistake prone so far on the early season, committing 11 turnovers and being penalized 19 times for 175 yards. As would be expected, Holtz isn’t taking the trip to West Lafayette, where the Boilers have a history of knocking off highly ranked Irish squads.

“They’re a much improved football team,” Holtz says. “We have not played particularly well the last couple of times we’ve been down there, but I think that’s probably a tribute to Purdue. Purdue plays very, very hard. I’d feel much more inclined to play the game if we were healthier, but it’s part of the game. The real good football team has got to rise above that.”

Again, Holtz isn’t looking beyond them. “They’re awful big and they’re awful strong up front,” Holtz says. “They put awful good pressure on the passer. They’ve given up some yards passing, but the wide receivers haven’t been able to make many yards on them. Their cornerbacks are some of the fastest we play this season.

“Defensively, Purdue’s going to be really strong in the Big Ten. Purdue will make its presence known.”

On offense, the Irish are still looking for consistency, despite back-to-back big wins. “We’re not really pleased with what’s happening on offense,” Holtz says. “I don’t think you’re ever pleased, but I wouldn’t want to give the impression that I’m displeased either. In both games we haven’t faced an awful lot of adversity. I’m interested to see how this team’s going to react when things don’t go our way.”

Offensively, we have not really played it wide open. We haven’t thrown the ball an awful lot in the second half. We have not been able to get the big play on offense. (But) I think our overall productivity and execution of our team this year is superior to last year’s in several respects.”

At quarterback, Terry Andrysiak has been solid if not spectacular. He’s completed 62 percent of his passes (hitting on 20 of 32 attempts) with only one interception. As expected, Tim Brown has been the main target with seven catches for 112. At split end, the Irish are still looking for consistency. Pat Terrell will start there Saturday, making him the third starter at the position in as many games.

On the ground, Mark Green has rambled for 92 yards. The Irish have been spreading the ball around a lot, as they’ve gone conservative with big second-half leads.

Purdue’s defense

As is their history, Purdue is once again a passing-oriented team. Doug Downing, a fifth-year senior is at the controls for the Boilermakers and has thrown for 426 yards and two touchdowns while completing 44-of-83 attempts (53 percent). On the flipside, he has five interceptions in two games.

Downing’s leading receiver is Anthony Hardy who has 22 catches for 124 yards. Tight end Brad Schumacher has 8 receptions for 71 yards and a touchdown.

On the ground, The Boilers rely on James Medlock. The senior has 33 carries for 146 yards. Darren Myles has 19 carries for 46 yards, and leads the team in scoring with two touchdowns.

The offensive line has given up seven sacks so far this season.

“What always scares you is a team that can throw the ball,” Holtz says of Purdue. “You always get scared to death when a team throws the ball and yet at the same time, we all seem to labor the point that you have to run in order to win.”

“Downing is a veteran. He’s well experienced. He picks out his receivers well, and runs the team very well.”

The question for the Irish defense is how healthy will it be? Defensive linemen Jeff Kunz and Ted Fitzgerald and linebackers Cedric Figaro and Wes Pritchett have all missed time this week. Should they be unable to play, that would leave a total of five starters, including cornerbacks Brandy Wells, out.

The Irish defense has only allowed two touchdowns in as many games and has come up with 11 takeaways. If the Irish continue their opportunistic ways, it could be a long day for Purdue.

Notre Dame’s defense

The Boilers return seven starters from last year, headlined by middle linebacker Fred Strickland. Strickland was a second-team All-Big Ten choice last year after leading the Boilers with 140 tackles. This year, he’s the leading squad with 21.

Chris Keevers, Tony Visco and Bill Gildea return to the defensive line, where Purdue is tough against the run—currently ranked 11th in the nation in run defense.

Last week the Purdue defense held Louisville to 31 net yards on the ground. More importantly, the Boilers have not given up a touchdown on the ground. The Boilers’ vulnerability lies in their secondary where two sophomores, Scott Kolinski at strong safety and Derrick Kelson at right corner, start.

Washington, with Chris Chandler, and Louisville have strafed the Boilers for 466 yards. Perhaps the most telling stat on the Purdue defense comes on third-down conversions. Of 21 attempts against them, the Boilers alive failed to hold their opponents on each and every one of them.

Major Nevada test picketed by anti-nuke protesters

Associated Press

MERCURY, Nev. - A nuclear weapons test rocked the desert and shook buildings 106 miles away in Las Vegas as peace protesters joined striking workers who had vowed to shut down the nation’s testing program.

Energy Department spokeswom an, according to Energy Department spokeswoman Barbara Yoerg.

The test, code-named Lockney, was detonated without containment in the ground.

Some 50 union pickets and a handful of anti-nuclear protesters who gathered on a road near the site’s main gate were unable to feel the blast, 45 air miles away. An anti-nuclear protester monitored the blast on a citizens’ band radio.

The blast registered 5.6 on the Richter scale at the National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo. The last announced test, Tahoka on Aug. 13, registered 5.7.

Lockney was the 12th announced shot at the test site this year. Not all tests are announced for security reasons.

The blast caused only a shudder at the test site control point, 28 miles from ground zero, according to Ms. Yoerg. It was felt more distinctly in Las Vegas, where managers of high-rise buildings had been warned not to have workers in precarious positions at the time of detonation.

The test was conducted as more than a third of the 8,300 employees at the sprawling test site continued to observe picket lines set up by striking Culinary Union workers and bus drivers. The workers had vowed to stop the government’s testing program.

Many of the union members honoring picket lines are steelworkers, mine workers, laborers and Teamsters who are involved in preparing shafts and tunnels in which the tests are conducted.

Energy Department officials, who are charged with conducting the nation’s nuclear testing program, have said that a strike by the union workers would slow work at the site but only a prolonged strike could affect testing.

appear in Washington as early as November of this year.

One of the major issues discussed at the next summit, Johansen said, will be the direction of the arms negotiations in the future. It remains uncertain whether or not the U.S. will agree to ban the testing of nuclear explosives, he said. In addition, Johansen believes another subject of discussion will be whether or not the U.S. will limit Star Wars testing to abide by the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty. Gorbachev has publicly stated that if the United States adheres to the ABM treaty, the Soviets will reduce their offensive missiles by fifty percent.

Johansen believes that the recent negotiations could open the door to future restrictions on the nuclear arms build-up.

American tourists need more tact

You can pick him out in a second. Nestled among throngs of Asians and Arabs usually stands at least one middle-aged, balding, over-weight man wearing shorts with a camera strapped around his neck. He is the American tourist. Baseball cap, t-shirt, shorts, dark socks, while tennis shoes and all.

Robert Hennig

This can lead to a European resentment of United States' insensitivity of Europe's many cultures. While the United Kingdom speaks roughly the same language as the U.S., there are distinct cultural differences. The monarchy is not just a quaint show put on for tourists, but a characteristic part of British society. And, for the thousandth time, Big Ben is not the tower itself, but rather the bell that rings every half hour.

Americans have got to stop insisting that host countries treat them like they do back in Wichita. In no way is this more evident than in language. The principle language in France is French, in Italy it is Italian. American tourists should be mindful of this and stop degrading everything in English. All of this breeds a certain degree of further resentment from Europeans and strains personal relations. While admired for our openness, confidence and sheer power (both military and economic), Americans are still, if not hated, at least partially disliked for these transgressions. At least, that has been my experience here in London.

It is time for some changes. The United States is no longer the hegemonic power of the world. We will have to more limited but still key role to play in world affairs and part of it is being more in touch with Europeans, their cultures and affairs.

So next time you are going abroad, leave the shorts and dark socks back in Cleveland.

Robert Hennig is a junior in the College of Arts & Letters London program.

Sensitivity issues can be ignored

Dear Editor:

For several weeks now, as I have gazed out my corner Cavanaugh window, I have been forced to see certain things. If you or anyone else you know rate above the window. Remember, if you are sensitive and are walking between Cavanaugh and Zahn - Just Say No.

Andrew Kinney

Undue criticism of self-expression

Dear Editor:

I can take some criticism. It helps make me a better person. No, it helps make me a better man. I am referring to the criticism of a member of "the better half" of Notre Dame. As you may well know, we are celebrating the 300th year of our Constitution. Within this document are the amendments, and I am pleading the First: Freedom of Speech. Ellette Doherty arrayed as me an "forcing" her to read my "quips." I would now like to enlighten her of the path, almost twenty feet away, next to Zahn. Ms. Doherty, are you too lazy to walk on that path instead of Cavanaugh? Hey, if you don't like it, then don't bother to look at it. As for the First Amendment, less than one week ago, an appeals court judge ruled that it was not slanderous for a man to refer to a woman as a "sleaze" in an editorial, since "he is expressing his First Amendment right.

Garry Trudea

Doonesbury

Not all of the quotes have had a feminine context. What about the others? There were quotes about youth, academic fraud, and other aspects of campus life. Also, none of the quotes were derogatory, or even crude; if they were, then how would you classify the "quips" of the Zahn chapter of the "He-man Woman Haters Club," which appear in the Observer itself? Monday's was exceptionally crude. In case you decide to berate me publicly and privately again, I am not a member of that club.

As far as being the producer, do you even bother to read the last lines of each quote? Maybe some of these names will sound familiar: S. Clemens, W. Faulkner, R. Frost, and W. Shakespeare. Somewhere I doubt they will. These great men did produce these "quips" totally on their own. Some would just "inspire" each and every one of them.

My accusation of laziness may be corr- it takes only minor effort to un- cover my identity. Here's how: 1) enter your name. All you had to do was ask. I would have liked to have had the opportunity to discuss this before you went to print. But you never even tried. Call me. I'm not afraid of giving you the opportunity to discuss this before you went to print. And please, no crank calls.

As for disrespect, I do make an effort not to upset any alumni on the weekends. I acknowledge that the alumni are the only Domers which matter to the Administration Building, and as such, should never be "forced" to read Mark Twain. Here's a thoughtprovoking "quip" especially for you, "Respect is never to be demanded with- out first earning it." - Aretha Pranklin.

By the way, I am writing this, two beautiful women from that "fenced-in" dorm are reading Monday's quotes. They are smiling.

Letters to a Lonely God

This is, could Notre Dame, in its search for greatness, be in danger of losing its Catholic soul?

Nipping wrote the "Recessional" as a reminder to the British Empire, celebrating its glory: "The tumult and the shouting dies. The captains and the kings depart. / Still the Chariots of the Sun advance on their way / And the kings depart. / Still the glory: The tumult and the sound of soldiers / ..."

As the chief administrator, he links the past with the present, this century with last century, the present administration with administrations far down the line. He is a revolutionary figure with a mandate for change, not for the preservation of the tradition of things that can't change, like the school's commitment to religion. If Notre Dame is to stay Notre Dame.

The symbols are mainly known by now may become secondary: the mosaic Christ on the library floor may replace the 21st century figure of Our Lady on the Dome as our most featured landmark. Many things are negotiable, but not this Notre Dame exists as a home for the faculty, the staff, faculty, maintenance workers, and other employees—studying, working, and praying to save their souls. The Holy Cross is the external sign of the covenant that this place has made with God. Once, most people here spoke French and English. Then they spoke mainly English. In ten years, the common language could be commonplace, or one of its dialects. Eggheads may swap the place. Frank Lloyd Wright may be born again as the campus architect. The Catholics could be outnumbered by the Buddhists. As long as the center holds—rooted in its French and English, by its humanity, on which the grace of Christ rests—Notre Dame will not be in danger of losing its Catholic soul—nor is it apt to be, as long as the Holy Cross order is here as an anchor.

It's a great day for the Irish when Holy Cross fields a new champion. Notre Dame has a variety of field representatives. In the years of change, Monk will be at bat. Every morning, seeing himself in the mirror, he'll keep the buck stops with him. At Catholic Notre Dame, he'll also know that he's not alone.

NFL strikers are turning to violence

Associated Press

One player was arrested for throwing an egg at a non-union replacement player for the Indianapolis Colts, New England Patriots, and Philadelphia Eagles.

The strike by the NFL players filled the air at most picket windowsashing.

Players on NFL picket lines flared earlier this week and then Eagles carried things farther. Patriots and Philadelphia Eagles investigators have asked both bottle-throwing and egg-throwing.

Charles Martin, who was vaunted by the Green Bay Packers earlier this week and then picked up by the Houston Oilers, was arrested in Green Bay for throwing an egg at a car that apparently belonged to a replacement player.

Sgt. William Parins said Martin, a defensive lineman, was taken into custody for throwing the egg. Martin said it was an accident and that he just dropped the egg, Parins said.

Martin was charged with disorderly conduct and released on $99.90 bond, according to Lt. Larry Gilie of the Green Bay police department.

Last season, Martin was suspended for two games by NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle.

TICKETS ARE NOW ON SALE AT THE A.C.C. BOX OFFICE, Center I, La Porte, and Music Magic (Benton Harbor) for the games.

The varsity basketball programs, men's and women's, will be holding their annual softball games Sunday, September 27, at 1:30 p.m. The games will be played at Moreau Field and all students are encouraged to come and support the basketball programs. - The Observer

Irish soccer takes to the road

By PETE SRIKO

The Notre Dame soccer team puts its perfect 8-0 record on the line this weekend at the Wright State Tournament in Dayton, Ohio. Wright State and Boston College will be looking to topple the Irish from the undefeated ranks, and Head Coach Dennis Grace knows that the pressure will be great.

"It's not as if we're going to collapse after our first loss," said the fourth-year veteran coach of the Irish. "But I know teams will have that extra incentive to tear us down. The guys on the team have a very positive attitude toward the whole thing. The emphasis isn't on going undefeated - it's on playing our best from game to game."

One-third of the way through the season, Grace has seen his team reach number 20 in the ISAA Collegiate Coaches Poll and an 18th ranking in Soccer America. Grace says his team is completely unphased by the rankings.

"I tell the guys we're ranked for a reason," Grace said. "We w ere not putting the ball down on the outside," said Lambert. "We had some problems with defense and bad control so we've got to eliminate that.

The return of Walker to the lineup and continued strong play from the team as a whole will be the key to an Irish victory over a Bowling Green team just recently knocked out of the Midwest Regional Poll.

Cunningham service ace and five kills by Wagner to stifle any hopes the Braves had of taking the game.

Cunningham and Waller led the team in kills with eight a piece and Waller contributed six blocks to help the Irish control the frontline.

Collins turned in a strong performance as setter, recording 19 assists and leading the play on the floor.

Notre Dame now prepares to face a tough Bowling Green team on the road this Saturday, looking to iron out any of last night's weaknesses.

"We were putting the ball down on the outside," said Lambert. "We had some problems with defense and bad control so we've got to eliminate that."

Take a look at the Students' Rights Manual being distributed throughout the dorms this week. Coach Joe Piane and his runners, however. That is the question of consistency.

The lack of consistency last year made for a frustrating season. But the Irish will find out if they can establish that consistency this year when they host the National Catholic Meet today at the Burke Memorial Golf Course. At Georgetown, Notre Dame looked as if it could beat any school in the country. If it can build on this excellent start, the squad may be off to one of its best seasons ever.

One of the most pleasant surprises against the Hoyas was the remarkable running of senior Mike Smoron. Smoron finished fifth (25:49) despite being injured until May. Smoron feels he can continue running well despite the tough competition.

"The team to beat will definitely be Loyola of Chicago," Smoron said. "I feel if we can keep our times down we can do really well." Freshman Pat Kearns also provided a spark for the Irish, finishing fourth in his first collegiate meet. Kearns feels very comfortable in his new surroundings and looks to improve on the Georgetown performance.

"Friday's race will come down to a battle of the fourth and fifth men," Piane said. "Schools such as Loyola and St. Thomas both have four to five outstanding runners.

For Theresa Rice, two years makes all the difference in the world.

As a freshman, she attended Saint Mary's and was a member of the women's track team. Then she changed her major, transferred to Notre Dame, and decided to give cross country a shot for the first time in her running career.

The results were startling. No one thought Rice, a nonserious runner for the Irish going into the National Catholic Championships today at 3 p.m. at Burke Memorial Golf Course. The dramatic turn of events has left Rice surprised, to say the least.

"I was just trying to make the varsity last year," Rice said. "I decided to run to get into shape for track. It's been gradual. All the work I've been doing has been helping."

Rice, a co-captain along with Julia Mertel, finished first in the Detroit Invitational and took fifth in the Purdue Triangular, but the big test comes this weekend against some of the top teams in the country.

"I'm excited about the opportunity to race these teams because some are nationally ranked," Rice said. "I think we have a good shot to be in the top five with everyone running as they should run. We'll do substantially better than last year (eighth)."

Rice had a best time of 18:51 last season and already has improved that to 18:40 this year. She gives much of her credit to Coach Dan Ryan.

"He's a really good coach," she said. "He gives you a lot of self-confidence. He sets higher goals than most of us would think about."

Ryan, though, is quick to return the compliment.

"She's solidly established herself as the top runner," he said. "She's really blossomed this past year. She made a smooth transition from NAIA to Division I."

While Ryan may have Rice in top form, he is not as lucky with two other runners. Junior Terry Kibelstis, one of the top runners, will not run because of two stress fractures, while Weedy Murray will take part despite a sprained ankle.

"It'll hurt the team without her (Kibelstis)," Ryan said, "but I think that in comparison to last year we are as strong if not stronger. I'm still confident we'll do well. Wendy is at 90 percent. Her ankle is taped, but she has no pain."

Villanova is the favorite to repeat as champion of the 22-team event, but should be challenged by DePaul, St. Thomas, Holy Cross, Detroit and the Irish.

"I'm shooting for the top five," Rice said. "It's thin, that's a reasonable goal."

said. "Some of the top-notch schools are so competitive you don't even feel a part of a team. Here, there's more of a team concept instead of everyone competing, and that's the way it should be."

Cahill will get to show her stuff with the rest of the team this weekend at Courtney Courts. The seven-team single flight tournament will feature action at 9, 12,30, and 3:30 on Saturday, and at 9 and 12 noon on Sunday morning.

ND returns home, sweeps past Braves
By MOLLY MAHONEY
Sports Writer

The Notre Dame volleyball team battled sporadic communication breakdowns and occasional inconsistencies last night but was still able to win easily over Bradley in three straight games, 15-7, 15-5 and 15-8.

The Irish dominated the match by keeping Bradley on the reat while maintaining their attack but struggled at times to sustain their momentum.

"We played well at spots and poorly at others," said Head Coach Art Lambert. "We just made way too many unforced errors."

The victory is Notre Dame's sixth consecutive win and brings the Irish to 10-3 on the year.

The Braves became the 13th home victim for the Irish who have not lost a game at home since September 16 last year against Western Michigan.

Notre Dame was able to jump out to a 7-2 lead in the first game thanks to four consecutive kills by sophomore outside hitter Kathy Cunningh- gham and the strong net play of junior Mary Kay Waller, who see IRISH, page 9

Freshman on a roll

Cahill has Irish winning

By STEVE MEGARGEE
Sports Writer

Irish women's tennis coach Michele Gelfman has a couple of good reasons to feel confident about her team heading into this weekend's Irish Invitational.

Reason One: The Irish have played like a group to be reckoned with this fall, cruising Northern Illinois and Marquette in dual matches, and surprising several Lady Hoosiers at the Midwest Invitational last weekend at Bloomington, Ind.

Reason Two: Number-one seeded freshman Ce Ce Cahill. Of course, reason two has been largely responsible for causing reason one.

"You really need to have a solid number one player, and it's tough for a freshman to do it," Gelfman said. "But she's done an outstanding job."

Exactly what Cahill has done is steamroll past her Northern Illinois opponents in both singles and doubles, then win the little in her singles flight at the Midwest invite, leaving three nationally ranked Indiana players in her wake. A case of the flu kept Cahill from competing against Marquette.

"Early in the season, we had not had any competition before Bloomington to evaluate her success," said Gelfman. "Now I can say the sky's the limit for her, and for the team the sky's the limit."

There was no reason to believe that Cahill would be intimidated by nationally-ranked opponents. Having practiced an average of two hours a day since she was 10 years old, the 5-foot dynamo from Hinsdale, Ill., was ranked 20th among the country among-18-year-olds as of last December.

"In my family, we all started playing at the same time," said Cahill. "Ever since I started playing, my goal was to go to nationals, then to go higher in nationals. I was striving to do better, and it was fun traveling to tournaments.

"Considering we'd only had one meet before Bloomington, I wasn't really thinking results, and that's probably why I did so well. Brenda Hecker, the girl I played in the finals, I'd played with before. And I knew the other girls just from the facts they'd played in tournaments, but they were always in higher age groups so I never played against them."

Gelfman already has noticed the effect Cahill has had on her other players. Now she hopes Cahill can help bring in more players of her caliber.

"When one player's doing well, everyone starts playing well, and the winning gets contagious," said Gelfman. "In terms of her concentration level and her determination, other players have seen what it takes to be that good."

"We were very fortunate to get her. She knew our tennis program was on the cutting edge of doing big things. Other players can look to Ce Ce as a role model for recruiting as one who will not only make it academically but athletically."

Cahill liked the team atmosphere shown at Notre Dame as opposed to what she saw in some other schools.

"I really liked the coach and the girls on the team," Cahill said of the strict program.
