Bentsen, Quayle face off in VP debate

Candidates clash on Quayle’s readiness

Associated Press

OMAHA, Neb.—Republican vice presidential candidate Dan Quayle said Wednesday night that he has as much experience as John F. Kennedy when he won the White House and is “prepared to lead this country” if necessary.

“Senator, you’re no Jack Kennedy,” Democratic rival Lloyd Bentsen shot back in the dramatic highlight of a 90-minute campaign debate.

“That was really uncalled for,” the 41-year-old Quayle retorted to his 67-year-old rival. Replied Bentsen:

“You’re the one that was making the comparison, senator... and I did not think the comparison was well taken.”

The clash over Quayle’s readiness for high office was the emotional climax of a high-stakes debate in which the vice presidential candidates also collided over the environment, Social Security and campaign reform. The two men aimed many of their best lines past each other and in the direction of presidential candidates George Bush and Michael Dukakis.

The Indiana senator said he has more experience in critical areas than Democrat Dukakis and added, “If qualifications alone are going to be the issue in this campaign, George Bush has more qualifications than Michael Dukakis and Lloyd Bentsen combined.”

Kennedy served in Congress 14 years before winning the White House in 1960. Quayle has served 12 years.

Bentsen took aim at the vice president’s vote in favor of a budget plan to curtail Social Security cost-of-living increases and said the Reagan administration had appointed high officials to speak to representatives of the public and advertising in industries.

“I then give them the English major, commented about how great the industry is and the idea of what the industry is really like,” he compared the students’ search to writing a term paper. “They come to me and say ‘I want to go into radio.’ I then give them the names of magazines and addresses where they can learn more about it.”

Senior Dawn Mack, an English major, commented about the representatives. They were open and honest. They told me both the good and bad sides of their jobs.”

Some students came to the event being fairly sure of their choice of career. Most, however, came to sample the wide variety of career opportunities available to an Arts and Letters major.

Quayle’s worthiness questioned

WASHINGTON—One question, asked time and time again, lowered over all others in Wednesday night’s vice presidential debate between Dan Quayle and Lloyd Bentsen: could the Indiana senator allay doubts about his qualifications for the office?

The question showed Quayle at his most prepared, looking straight into the camera, his gestures under control, citing his 12-year record in Congress. “I have more experience and accomplishments than does the governor of Massachusetts,” he said, referring to Demo-

Arts and Letters Career Day puts job market on display

The prospect of finding the right career field attracted over 500 students to the annual Arts and Letters Career Day Wednesday.

“The purpose of this event is to provide students with information about a specific career field, not to recruit for a particular company,” said Paul Reynolds, associate director of Career and Placement Services, which sponsored the event.

Career Day, the tenth of its kind, allowed students the opportunity to speak to representatives of 30 career areas about all aspects of their jobs and to receive literature. The careers represented ranged from social services to graduate schools to commercial banking. The largest crowds were attracted to the representatives of the public relations and advertising industries.

Bob Williams of WSBT television, who represented the communications industry, said the event “gives students an idea of what the industry is really like.” He compared the students’ search to writing a term paper. “They come to me and say ‘I want to go into radio.’ I then give them the names of magazines and addresses where they can learn more about it.”

U.S. denies hostage dealing

Associated Press

WASHINGTON—The State Department on Wednesday dismissed as “pure fantasy” an assertion by an Iranian opposition leader that the Reagan administration secretly negotiated with Tehran for the release of American hostages in Lebanon.

“There have been no negotiations, no direct contacts between the United States and Iranian officials,” said spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley. “There may be private individuals who misrepresented themselves as speaking on behalf of the U.S. government.”

Former Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr said Tuesday in Paris that Richard Lawless, a former U.S. official, had negotiated in behalf of Vice President George Bush with a representative of Iranian Parliament Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani.

In reply, Oakley said: “We have flatly denied anyone is speaking on behalf of the U.S. government.”

Lawless, president of a Washington-based trade investment firm known as U.S.-Asia, denied through a business partner that he had engaged in any talks with Iranians about the hostages.

In a statement Lawless relaxed through partner Theresa Shaeen, he said, “I categorically deny, and state for the record, that I am involved either directly or indirectly in any discussions or negotiations with any party related to attempts to secure the release of hostages in Lebanon.”

Shaeen said Lawless could produce passport and charge card travel records that prove he was not in that part of the world during the time that Bani-Sadr says he was involved.

The New York Times and The Washington Times, quoting sources they did not identify, reported Wednesday that Lawless worked for the CIA at the U.S. embassy in Seoul in the 1970s, during the same period Bush’s national security adviser, Donald Gregg, served with the CIA in Korea.

In addition, The New York Times quoted an unidentified former government official as saying that Lawless had worked in the CIA’s operations directorate until several years ago.

A roadblock could block Dan Quayle's visit to Napoleon, Ohio next week. City Council members voted Monday 3-2 to close the street in front of the courthouse for Quayle's campaign stop. But at least four votes were needed to block off the street. A sixth Councilman, a Republican, is out of town this week and will attend Monday night's meeting.
The two Democrats on the Council who voted against closing the street said they were not against Quayle's visit, but rather they did not like the way the issue was brought before Council. "I didn't want to be put in the position to make the decision," said Ward Councilman Tom Gold. So I'm looking at it as he (Mayor Steven Lankenau) wants special permission from me for a gala Republican meeting out in front of the courthouse. ... I could not say yes to that," he said. Bachman said after the vote he suggested that Quayle should appear at the high school football stadium. - Associated Press

Sterilization will affect the sentencing of an Indianapolis woman found guilty of neglect in the death of her four-year-old son. Melody S. Baldwin, 29, was sterilized Tuesday in the Marion County Courthouse by Circuit Judge E. J. Jonhson, who had suggested he would be lenient with Baldwin if she underwent the procedure. "She didn't like it, but said she wanted to do it, mainly to cooperate with the court," James D. Slagle, half-brother to Baldwin, said following a hearing to allow Baldwin to be released on bond. Slagle said she entered into the plea agreement because she was "threatened" with the possibility of a 30- to 50-year prison term on the murder charge. Baldwin gave birth to a son Sunday and gave him up for adoption. She faces a maximum sentence of 20 years in prison. - Associated Press

Laundry is one of those small chores moms take care of, children for take for granted, and college students take for granted. In between breaks, however, students are forced to bite the bullet, collect their quarters and hit the wash room themselves.

When I was younger, I considered laundry a chore. Rather they did not like the way the issue was brought to the forefront. I don't want to be put in the position to make the decision," he said. Bachman said after the vote he suggested that Quayle should appear at the high school football stadium. - Associated Press

I wasn't sure exactly what happened during those quiet hours between dusk and dawn in the depths of my basement, but whatever it was kept me in spotless shirts and clean jeans, so I didn't complain. Ah, ignorance was bliss!

The summer before my freshman year, the myth was dispelled. One early August morning, Mom dropped the bomb. After summoning me down to the laundry room, she carefully explained that it was meticulous mothers and not Dynamo dwarves that kept kids in clean clothes. Adding insult to injury, she explained that one day I, too, would be subject to this foul chore.

Reality really set in the day I left for school. As my parents kissed me goodbye. Mom pushed a roll of quarters into my palm.

Now if this wasn't a symbolic gesture, I don't know what is.

My dorm allots Thursday nights "Guys' night" in the laundry room. Some may take this opportunity to do their own wash, to do their roommates' wash or to just saunter by the laundry room every ten minutes. After all, it's only a matter of time before they're summed in to aid some "dude in distress." I, however, have not fallen prey to this warped scheme. Instead, on Thursday nights, I lock myself in my room, pull the shades and take the phone off the hook.

There is no sight more pitiful than watching a wash clothes for the first time. These boys can ace metallurgical engineering exams, calculate the number of moles in any compound and list every battle of the Prussian War, but they can't decide whether to wash their tube socks in hot or cold water.

On laundry night, guys will stagger into the wash room, lugging several overflowing clothes hampers. (Most male dorms have laundry as long as possible generally until their clothes can walk to the cleaners themselves.) They then trudge to a remote corner of the laundry room, pour the contents of their hampers out into the floor and start at the heap helplessly.

After a few moments if they're feeling particularly starved the guys proceed to place their clothes into piles. Unfortunately, logic rarely prevails. Men cannot understand why they can't simply wash all the clothes they wear on the upper halves of their bodies in one machine, and the articles they wear on their bot­ tom halves in another.

At this point, some sympathetic observer understands and decides to assist the poor, misguided soul. She (it is invariably "she") explains that clothes must be washed according to their color.

Ah-hah! The male is on his way to making laundry history now! But he's still a little confused.

"Should I put the fabric softner in the washer or in the dryer?"... "Do black socks bleed?"... When I was younger, I considered laundry a chore. Rather they did not like the way the issue was brought to the forefront. I don't want to be put in the position to make the decision," he said. Bachman said after the vote he suggested that Quayle should appear at the high school football stadium. - Associated Press

If no one is around to answer such earth-shattering questions, guys will hesitate to walk upstairs, knock on random doors and plead for an explanation. If a girl is gullible enough to answer the door on a Thursday night, she can abandon all hope of studying. Instead, she'll undoubtedly spend the next few hours teaching this domestic dufus the wonders of modern lint removers.

And there are always the guys who let their fingers do the walking. Leaping through the phone book, they'll call random numbers until they strike a gold mine (alas a girl's heart). "This is Fairley Hall? Great. Can you go down to the laundry room and see if there's a name named Bruce down there? He forgot this deterg­ ent. I'm sure you'll recognize him. He's the one in the pink undershirt with the bleach stains..."

Speaker pushes for consistent life ethic

By BRIDGET GOYVAERTS
News Staff

Abortion is not the only pro-life issue that must be addressed today, according to Ronald Sider, executive director of a political action committee that supports political candidates who uphold a "consistent life ethic."

The major pro-life issues are abortion, nuclear arms and poverty, Sider said last night in a lecture in the Center for Continuing Education.

Sider, the head of JustLife, a group which supports pro-life political candidates, told students that a total commitment to all aspects of life is necessary for a consistent pro-life ethic. He said JustLife agrees with Cardinal Joseph Bernardin, archbishop of Chicago, on the need for a consistent ethic of life. One cannot speak out against abortion and support the nuclear arms race, for this would be contradictory to the pro-life ethic as a whole, Sider said.

JustLife is based on the Christian belief that "all life is precious," Sider said, adding that life must be whole with God, neighbor and earth.

This wholeness is the basis for the stand the organization takes, that all pro-life issues are of equal value. Sider said neither the liberals nor the conservatives are right on the various issues. He made it clear that consistency is of the utmost importance, and that the true test is "whether or not we have the courage to let the author of life set the agenda for our life."

JustLife has endorsed 35 candidates of both parties, including third Congressional District candidate Tom Ward, a Notre Dame graduate, for their opposition to legalized abortion and other issues, Sider said.

The organization supports neither presidential candidates for the 1988 election.

Board votes for St. Mary's computer

By MARY BETH BLAJDA

The St. Mary's Board of Governance voted last night in favor of purchasing a MAC SE computer for student government use.

"This is a worthwhile investment and one goal of our administration," said Julie Parish, student body president.

The Board ratified a written proposal from Student Government by a 21-1-1 vote.

The standard Apple computer, Image writer II printer and accessories will be leased with an option to buy in the second semester.

The proposed location for the computer is 306 Haggar College Center, a room often used by student government. This location was considered for security reasons and its close proximity to student government offices.

"It's a good location for the computer since the third floor of Haggar is the hub of student government life," says Junior Class President Lisa Catenacci.

The computer will be accessible for student government use during normal hours for Haggar, 7:30 a.m.-midnight on weekdays and 7:30 a.m.-2 a.m. on weekends. The computer will not be available when the room is reserved for club meetings.

The vice presidential rivals shook hands and smiled as they met at center stage for the beginning of their televised debate. The television audience numbered in the millions, Bush and Dukakis among them.

The debate was dominated from the beginning by questions over the qualifications the 41-year-old Quayle possess for the vice presidency. Bentsen, who has sharply questioned his rival’s maturity on the campaign trail, said a vice president must be prepared to take over “without any margin for error.” “The debate is about the presidency itself,” he said. “The stakes could not be higher.”

More than once Quayle insisted that “age alone” was not the issue, but experience. He said that in arms control, deficit and education, he had a record in Congress, and said, “I’m prepared” to take over in the event of the death of the president.

Asked what his first step would be, he replied, “First I’d say a prayer for myself, for the country that I was about to lead and then I would assemble his (the president’s) people and talk.”

Later, Quayle said he did not want to address hypothetical questions but wanted to assure voters, “I will be prepared to lead this country.”

The debate produced periodic boos, cheer and laughter from the audience in the Omaha Civic Auditorium, so much so that moderator Judy Woodruff asked for silence during the high-stakes debate.

Just as Quayle was asked to defend his qualifications, Bentsen was asked about his differences with Dukakis on such issues as aid to the Nicaraguan rebels, the death penalty and gun control.
Bishop, nun speak on pastoral letter

By ASHOK RODRIGUES
Staff Reporter

The chairman of the U.S. Bishop's Committee on Women in the Church, Bishop Joseph Imesch, and a consultant to the committee, Sister Sara Butler, spoke Wednesday on "Women in the Church: A Pastoral Letter in the Making."

The committee issued a first draft of its letter last April. Since that point there have been revisions to the letter, and the bishops hope to have a final draft out by November of next year.

In order to let women best voice their concerns, the committee issued thousands of questionnaires to women in dioceses, college campuses and the military. "It was the concern that the letter come from the bishops and consultants down, but from the grass roots up," said Imesch.

He noted that the committee wished to make people aware of the "great gift of women to the Church," and to let women know that they are appreciated. "We hope to dispell some of the unconscious sexism in the Church," Imesch added.

Butler said that on reading the responses from women that "there was an overwhelming sense that women want to be regarded as persons." She noted that the committee found "sexism to be a moral and social evil."

The speakers said that the committee did not cover the topic of the ordination of women. Imesch stated, "A pastoral letter is not where a theological argument is advanced, it's a pastoral commentary a situation." Butler concurred that the purpose was not to cover new ground, but to "chart how we feel" about the role of women in the Church.

Butler also observed that the committee was doing, with both the bishops and consultants down, but from the grass roots up," said Imesch. He noted that the committee wished to make people aware of the "great gift of women to the Church," and to let women

Abortion protesters continue Atlanta sit

Associated Press

ATLANTA-- Police headed off anti-abortion sit-ins Wednesday by impounding the demonstrators' bus and increasing security at clinics where 300 people were arrested a day earlier during the protesters' "siege of Atlanta."

Officers dragged three demonstrators to police vans Wednesday.

Most demonstrators, however, limited activities to praying and singing hymns.

The bus was impounded as it took demonstrators from a silent vigil at one clinic to a demonstration at another. "The officer determined (the bus) to be unsafe for operation."

When it was stopped there was smoke coming out and it was crowded with too many people," said police spokesman Myrna May. She said she did not know how many were aboard.

Protesters on Tuesday complained that police treated them with unnecessary harshness, twisting arms and fingers and using pressure-point holds just under the ears to force them into buses.

Some screamed or cried as they were taken away, and four were treated for apparently minor injuries.

George Napper, Atlanta commissioner of public safety, said he believed there were isolated arrests "in which police could have acted more gently" but that he thought the overall behavior was justified.

Demonstrators on Wednesday arrived gradually at the Feminist Women's Health Clinic, where police arrested one for trying to jump a barricade and two others for assaulting a woman trying to enter the clinic, W. Holley said.
Researchers develop contraceptive vaccine

Associated Press

NEW YORK—An experimental contraceptive vaccine has blocked fertility without fail in female and male guinea pigs, researchers report, raising prospects that a similar approach might one day work for women and men.

The vaccine is designed to prevent fertilization, which may make it more widely acceptable than another vaccine already in human testing that stops development of the embryo, other scientists said. Still, "There are many things about it that would have to be changed or improved to make it a useful method for either agricultural animals or humans," cautioned researcher Paul Primakoff.

Primakoff and colleagues at the University of Connecticut Health Center in Farmington report the experiment in Thursday's issue of the British Journal Nature.

It is the first demonstration of contraception without failure from a vaccine, experts said.

None of the 25 female guinea pigs that got the vaccine blocked litters, nor did the males of the six immunized male guinea pigs. Animals that received sham immunizations for comparison purposes remained fertile.

The vaccine's effect was temporary. Eleven of 24 females tested had regained fertility by nine to 11 months after the immunization, and all four of the longest-studied group had delivered litters by 15 months. New polls show Bush ahead

NEW YORK — A second national poll has found Democrat Michael Dukakis closing on George Bush in the presidential race, although a newer survey released Wednesday gave the Republican a slightly better lead.

Both surveys found many voters expressing concern about Bush's running mate, Sen. Dan Quayle of Indiana.

The newer poll, an ABC News-Washington Post survey conducted from Sept. 28 through Tuesday, put the race at 51-44 percent with the Republicans in the numerical lead. The poll of 1,196 likely voters had an error margin of about four points.

In the other survey, a Harris poll conducted last week, the Republicans won support from 49 percent of 1,235 likely voters, to 46 percent for the Democrats. It also was a dead heat, given the three point margin of error.

A Harris poll early last month put the race a bit wider, at 50-44 with Bush and Quayle ahead. Similarly, a CBS News-New York Times poll released Tuesday put the race at 48-46, tightened from 49-44 last month.

The ABC-Post and Harris polls were released on the night of Quayle's debate with Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, the Democratic vice presidential nominee. Like other polls, both found doubts about Quayle's qualifications for office.

In the ABC-Post poll, 40 percent said Quayle was qualified to be vice president, but 33 percent said not; the rest didn't know. By contrast, 67 percent said Bentsen was qualified and just 7 percent said not.

A second national poll has found Democrat Michael Dukakis closing on George Bush in the presidential race, although a newer survey released Wednesday gave the Republican a slightly better lead.

Sometimes last spring I realized that it's been 10 years since I graduated from college. After getting over the shock of 10 years, I began thinking about the path that took me from Notre Dame to where I am today. I remember I spent most of my senior year thinking about careers, and as a matter of fact, just about everybody at Notre Dame is usually thinking about careers in one way or another. Junior honors students, business students, and the juniors are deciding on majors, the seniors are thinking about job interviews and the reality of internships, and the seniors are thinking about careers, and as a matter of fact, what happens while you're busy elsewhere?

John Lennon once said that "Life is what happens while you're busy making other plans" and I find more truth in that statement every day. If someone would have told me during my senior year that my life was going to turn out the way it actually has, I would have had them check for drug abuse.

In the mid-seventies it seemed that career hysteria was at its zenith. It seemed as though everyone was planning on going to law or medical school or a Big Eight accounting firm. Even the liberal arts programs were planning for MBA school. Nobody was planning on opening a philosophy shop, or being a street person across America. I fell right in with the zeitgeist and became an accounting major, because that is what I had been supposed for that way.

I could accomplish something with just my ownmettle, without my upper-middle-class script supporting me.

The problem was that I could never think of any way to justify passing up a job or grad school, even temporarily. A professor finally told me that no matter what I did, there would be others who would have to live with the decisions I made. And true enough, I find that before, I expected of me the only one who would have to live with the decisions I made. And true enough, I was the only one who would have to live with the decisions I made. And true enough, I was the only one who would have to live with the decisions I made.

My decision of what to do, now that I had veered out of the mainstream, was to become a volunteer in the VISTA program. (VISTA is the domestic counterpart of the Peace Corps) Why VISTA? It offered a chance to experience a way of life very different from anything I knew. It offered a chance to help the people who got dealt worst and threes in the game of life, while people like me got all the face cards, and if I wanted to, I could choose a chance to prove to myself that I could accomplish some-thing that is not in my ownmettle, without my upper-middle-class script supporting me.

I ended up living in rural Alabama and working for an organization that ran a network of low-income cooperatives and credit unions and also did some civil right and advocacy work for its constituency. For two years I was a white boy from the suburbs living in a trailer with hot and cold running ro­om in an all-black community and I did not have upper-middle-class script supporting me. I had never been to Yellowstone before.

Working in Yellowstone was like going to college with no homework, and with a wonderful, adventurous people who loved the mountains and Yellowstone as much as I came to. I would have loved to have another year, but it was too late. 'Antigone' pertinent to the times

accent writer

In this election year, voters are confronted with a choice between a passionless technocrat and an heir to our nation's best cheerleader. This difference in leadership styles is also at the heart of the current Notre Dame's Mary's Theatre production of "Antigone."

Adapted by Lewis Galantiere from Jean Anouilh's play, it focuses on the decision of Antigone to disobey an edict issued by her uncle, King Creon, forbidding the burial of her brother, in order to consolidate power and stabilize his troubled Kingdom of Thebes. Antigone, however, cannot abide by her uncle's command, and is motivated by her conscience to give her brother the proper religious burial he deserves. This leads to the central conflict of the play, as Creon persuades Antigone to abandon her moral crusade, and obey his order. If she refuses, he will be forced to kill her for state treason.

The exciting debate that follows between these two main characters contrasts two opposing views concerning governing a nation. Creon argues that a king should lead a nation with his mind, and to the letter of the law. Antigone insists that everyone, especially a leader, should follow his heart and be true to the emotions in it. The acting by the cast was both professional and sincere, evoking emotions and sparking contemplation of the themes previously discussed. The lead performance as given by Kristen Schumacher was especially effective in conveying the conviction of her character, as well as the beauty of her fate. Mark J. Costanzl's Creon exuded a nobility and assurance which was appropriate, emotionally charged, but not overdone.

The supporting characters are all portrayed with equally effective drive and intensity. Suri Scott's one-woman Greek Chorus calls for special attention as her portrayal ranks as one of the most memorable narration performances I have seen. Also worthy of recognition are Bridget McCarthy's Nurse, who receives my "Neil Simon Jewish Mother" award for her wonderful comic relief; Gerald Welch's Haemon, who maintains the proper balance between handsome prince and good natured boyfriend; Michael Murphy's Private Jones who also dabbles successfully in a comic vein; and Emily Stoddart who steals the show as Creon's page, managing to follow the king without getting lost in his shadow.

The staging and direction of the play were all quite natural, managing to augment the actors' performances without interfering with the audience's enjoyment of the dialogue. The costume and set decorator should also be congratulated for constructing a visually appealing atmosphere in which the actors can practice their craft. In fact, many commented that the costumes must have been borrowed from "Star Trek," which is perfect for a play that contains many anachronistic touches due to its many revisions since Sophocle's original.

On the whole, I must concede with Creon who at one point remarks, "It's hard to say yes, but it is the best answer."

Dear Students:

As you probably know, Notre Dame will play host to the University of Miami football team on October 15. I understand Miami coach Jimmy Johnson has been the recipient of several phone calls and letters from Notre Dame students regarding the upcoming football game.

When I first came to Notre Dame, I was impressed with four things about the student body—its competitiveness, its intelligence, its intense desire to succeed and its closeness and caring for other people. I would hope our students display those same traits when it comes to football rivalries.

I'm the first one to appreciate the competitiveness and the intense desire of the Notre Dame students to succeed. I hope you appreciate those same traits in our football players and coaches for the tremendous accomplishments we ought to show a great deal of respect to Miami, its players on the field every week.

I hope you appreciate those same traits when it comes to football. It also seems that if our students wish to display their intelligence, their close relationship to their alma mater as sports information director in 1966. He previously had served as administrative assistant to Irish football coach Terry Brennan from the time he graduated in 1954 until going to work for Mercedes-Benz of North America in 1959.

Long regarded as one of the pillars of the sports publicity field, Valdiserri served as CoSIDA president in 1986-87 and also received the organization’s top individual award that year when he was honored with the Arch Ward Award—which goes annually to a CoSIDA member for his outstanding contributions within and outside of the profession. He presently is a member of that organization’s board of directors and is chairman of the NCAA Communications Committee.

Happy Birthday

The Notre Dame men’s soccer team was supposed to play an afternoon match at Valparaiso Wednesday afternoon. As it turned out, they never left the campus. An early morning deluge at Valparaiso led to the cancellation of the soccer match. Apparently part of the Crusaders’ soccer field is laid over the baseball field on the campus, and the Valparaiso athletic department did not want to risk ruining the field. "Their athletic director did not want to play the game on their field," said Irish coach Dennis Grace. "We tried to reschedule the game, but no open dates on our schedule matched." Before the game was cancelled two alternate solutions were offered. Valparaiso suggested playing at a nearby field, but Grace objected. "The field is only 58 yards wide," he said, noting the NCAA minimum is 65 yards. "We played on that field my first year here, and it was just terrible. There is not enough room for 11 players." Finally Grace offered to play the game at Krause Stadium. Although the Crusaders would have only 50 miles to travel, they declined.

Henderson's hit lifts A's 3-2

Dodgers even series with Mets, win 6-3 behind Belcher

Associated Press

BOSTON - Dave Henderson, a former Boston postseason hero, singled home the tiebreaking run in the eighth inning and the Oakland Athletics beat the Red Sox 2-1 Wednesday in the first game of the American League playoffs.

Jose Canseco's home run had held up since the fourth inning as Oakland's Dave Stewart and Bruce Hurst hooked up in a pitching duel. But Wade Boggs hit a sacrifice fly in the seventh, setting up Henderson's heroes on a chilly afternoon at Fenway Park.

Carney Lansford hit Hurst's first pitch in the eighth for a double and Henderson grounded the next pitch into right field for the go-ahead single.

Oakland's bullpen, which held Boston to three runs in 35 innings this year, did the job again and preserved the lead. Rick Honeycutt relieved Stewart with the bases loaded and one out in the seventh and kept Boggs to a sacrifice fly.

In the second, Boggs - a .373 hitter - was waged against the bases loaded - struck out in the same situation, the first time he had fanned in 22 lifetime at-bats against Stewart.

Dodgers 6, Mets 3

Los Angeles - Rookie Tim Belcher allowed five hits in 8 1-3 innings and the Dodgers chased pitcher-reporter David Cone with five runs in the first two innings as Los Angeles beat the New York Mets 6-3 Wednesday night to even the National League playoffs at a game apiece.

In an article written for the New York Daily News, Cone said Los Angeles reliever Jay Howell looked "like a high school pitcher" in the ninth inning of Game 1 when the Mets scored three times for a 2-1 victory. Cone also said Dodgers starter Orel Hershiser was lucky to shut out the Mets for eight innings.

A healthy Banks means a complete backfield

Notre Dame's backfield rushed for 321 yards in a 8-7 rout of Purdue two weeks ago and 341 yards in crushing Stanford 42-14 last Saturday night.

And that was when the backfield was plagued by a series of injuries to key players.

Saturday afternoon against Pittsburgh the Irish will have all of their backs in the lineup and the results could be even more impressive than in recent games.

Junior fullback Braxton Banks, who started the first two games, will be back after missing the last two contests with torn knee ligaments. Banks suffered a partially torn knee ligament in last year's opener at Michigan and missed games against Michigan State and Purdue. He bobbled back to gain 112 yards on 34 carries and four touchdowns. His high game was 59 yards on 11 carries against USC.

In this young season, Banks has carried four times for 13 yards. Ironically, Banks went down at Michigan State on artificial turf and the Irish will play on turf again at Pittsburgh Saturday.

Greg Guffy

Football Notebook

"If I was on the grass, it would make it a little better," Banks said. "I'd rather play my first game on grass, but I can't do much about it."

Fullback Anthony Johnson also went down in East Lansing with a sprained ankle. He missed the Purdue game and carried 14 times for 61 yards and a touchdown against Stanford. Johnson should be near full strength against the Panthers.

With Johnson and Banks back at tailback, Tony Brooks can return to the tailback spot behind Mark Green. Brooks rushed for 110 yards versus the Boilermakers and 59 against the Cardinal. Green has been consistent, gaining 293 yards in the four Irish victories.

The Panthers have been inconsistent against the rush. Pittsburgh surrendered only 71 and 91 yards on the ground in victories over Northern Iowa and Ohio State, but gave up 461 and 134 rushing yards in losses to West Virginia and Boston College. Notre Dame ran for 464 yards against Pittsburgh in 1971, the most ever allowed by the Panthers.

With all four top backs in the lineup, Notre Dame is in good shape problems to the Pittsburgh defense. If all four regain full strength, the Irish could dominate opposing defenses even more.

"There's no telling where we could go," Banks said. "We were voted the No. 1 backfield in the nation during the summer. I can't see anything that can stop a healthy backfield. That goes for any team in the country, not just ourselves."
