Sen. Coats leads drug meeting on campus

Law enforcement officers, prosecutors and legislators from across Indiana came to Notre Dame Wednesday for a drug abuse prevention conference sponsored by U. S. Senator Dan Coats.

The conference, entitled "Off the Streets: Drug Enforcement in Indiana," focused on the problems law enforcement agencies face in combating the problem of illegal drugs in Indiana.

"This is an awareness about drugs in our nation, an awareness that will lead to action. This action will lead to success in the war against drugs," said Coats.

Coats, a ranking member of the U. S. Senate Subcommittee on Children, Family, Drugs and Alcoholism, said that the drug problem has "exploded across our landscape" since he took office in January.

"One of my missions has been to attempt to bring the message of the impact of drugs on Indiana, on the industrial heartland, on the area I represent to the state of Indiana," said Coats.

South Bend Mayor Joseph Kernan said, "We face a very serious problem in our community—that problem is drugs." He called the drug problem a "scourge" that affects all communities.

According to David Link, dean of the Law School, Coats chose Notre Dame as a location for the conference because it was a convenient location in South Bend. "He was also attracted by the fact that Father Malloy was here," said Link.

University President Father Edward Malloy is a member of Indiana Governor Evan Bayh's Committee for a Drug-Free Indiana. The head of that committee, Jeff Modisett, serves as Drug Czar for the Bayh Administration.

Malloy called the drug problem a "very perplexing and difficult social and moral issue." He offered some ways to approach this problem.

The presence of alcohol abuse in the family unit is usually something one would find in a rebel type of student, said Kelly. The rebel type of student usually has trouble in school, work and at home. Alcohol is used to deal with problems and to build self-esteem.

The rebel type of student usually has trouble in school, work and at home. Alcohol is used to deal with problems and to build self-esteem. The rebel type of student is insecure and unsure of himself. When a branch of the family is disrupted, the whole family is affected.

Kelly explained that when one branch of the mobile is disrupted, the whole structure is disrupted by alcohol. When one member of the family is disrupted, the family as a whole is disrupted.

A short film shown at the discussion explained that there are four categories into which children of alcoholics can usually be placed. These categories are the rebel type, the responsible type, the masochist, and the caretaker.

Kelly explained that three of these four types result in a worsening of the alcoholic's situation, and a denial of the real problem of alcohol abuse in the family.

One stereotype that Kelly explored is the responsible type of son or daughter, generally the type of student one would find at Notre Dame. This type of person is usually achievement-oriented and successful in school and activities.

The presence of alcohol abuse in the family upsets the "mainstream" by depriving the son or daughter of the praise and affirmation he or she needs, Kelly said. As a result, the child becomes insecure and unsure of his abilities.
The quest for the easy 'A' is a futile effort

I sacrifice my high ideals to the almighty god of the high GPA.

I have a vision of the perfect class. This class will be interesting, will entail some sort of enjoyable work like watching movies, and boost my GPA because of the high mark the excellent professor will give me. For 3 1/2 years I have been searching for this perfect class, but it has eluded me.

My friends constantly come to me and say "Blas, have I got a class for you. It's so easy you'll have to wonder if you didn't get an "A." Unfortunately, their easy A's turn into my generous Cs.

It doesn't matter to me that I'm paying 15 grand a year to learn something from this fine institution. I want a class that will yield maximum results with a minimum of effort. Something fluffy like the "Evolution of the American Cowboy" or the Classics. The Cowboys' way would shield my plummeting GPA from the barrage of metaphysical Nothingness and Existential Realities seminars.

I want to go to a graduate school, a major university or get a great job in Chicago so I can watch the Cubs lose year after year from the top of the roof of the White Sox. I can't decide which. What more can I ask for out of life? What else is there?

My friends had informed me of their latest experience of introductory business courses. They assured me of the simplicity of the material and the sublime humor of the instructors. They even had movies and the books had pictures, a prerequisite for a truly enjoyable class. So with my career objectives in mind, my friends' assurances and my course selection book in hand, I decided to enroll in two introductory business courses.

What better way to supplement my liberal education than with some basic business classes and more importantly boost my GPA? In the back of my mind, I feared that my friends were inconsistent with my desire for a liberal education. After all, I had not come to college to be trained like a robotic tool and take my place with the other cogs in the wheels of corporate America.

But I sacrificed my lofty ideals to the almighty god of the high GPA and enrolled in my courses. At first, I believed that I had found the elusive promised land of easy courses.

We talked about TV commercials and shows in class and the textbooks were easy to read, something unheard of in my PLs. These numerous digressions in Aristotle's works and the myriad of ambiguous pronouns in Kant's works did not phase me. My business textbooks, "Reading Descartes' Moderns" would be so easy I had only highlighted his key points in bold and set them out in the margin in red in case you missed them the first time through like my textbooks. But the best thing about these books was that they had graphics and PICTURES. Not just ordinary, simplistic PICTURES of dancing raisins and Mickey Mouse.

I was seduced by the fascinating material and the marble covers from yesteryear, but... I never got my friends to read those books, perhaps I thought they were ancient curiosities or something. I never grasped the definitions of product and was entranced by our material and spent most of their time during the daily crossword puzzle in The Observer. They even began to have races during class to see who could finish the puzzle first.

My enthusiasm for my classes ended when one Sunday at mass I became frightened after I insisted a thank you for the Mass. Then I conceptualize the Supermarket in the Lord's Prayer.

I began to wonder if I felt the cells I had left would turn into the Grandmas Gooseberry's Jam we discussed in class the previous week. Had my head become the pure cream filled golden sponge cake, the Twinkie, that jumps in the sardine and lassos Oreo cookies in distress.

My mind had moved from the metaphysical to the mundane. My thoughts, once filled with the ancient propositions of the Greeks, were now filled with statistics on student aid and per cent ages were now filled with statistics on student aid and percentages. The very uselessness of the feign theories was the reason I enjoyed them so much. Selling Ho's and nylons was far too practical - I couldn't lose my mind.

I dropped one of my courses and somehow managed to pull a passing grade in the other. My quest for the perfect class, however, continues. You know you got a great class with easy tests and an interesting prof...

Economist discusses American labor unions

BY PATRICK HEALY

Staff Reporter

Economist discusses what he called "the new economic environment" in a lecture Wednesday night.

Ayoub stated that labor's changing role was a result of the decline of U.S. competitiveness and slower real growth since the 1960's. These economic factors caused management to demand back many concessions the union had fought for and won over several decades, said Ayoub. "The pendulum had swung" away from the days of union strength, Ayoub said.

As industries such as steel, autos, and textiles continued to suffer, management and labor had to restructure their relationship with one another, he said. Ayoub said that this led to labor to evolve from an organization whose function was to bargain with management to one whose function was to participate alongside them. This included participation in decision-making, equity ownership of the company, and representation of labor on the board of directors, said Ayoub. Ayoub emphasized that labor must take on this new participatory role in order for the U.S. economy to be competitive in the international economy. He noted three developments in the new relationship between labor and management: the emergence of profit-sharing, Employee Stockholder Ownership Planning (ESOP), and participatory involvement.

He said that profit-sharing and ESOPs serve as insurance for the unions for concessions they made to help the company. There is also a premise in both of workers' attitudes improving because of their interests in the company.

Ayoub said the notion behind participatory involvement is that workers should have much more input in management because it utilizes the knowledge and skill of the workers.

Ayoub said cooperation between labor and management is difficult because "the history of mistrust is a strong obstacle" to be overcome in a short time. He noted that "there is no natural tendency toward cooperation in America."

For agreement between management and labor there must be acceptance and respect on both sides, Ayoub said. A balance of power is also essential to a fair agreement, he added.

Ayoub concluded by stating that he believed "unions are an essential component of democratic society," and that "there is a trade union in our future, of that I am certain."
The crime of the week is the theft of computer equipment from O’Shaughnessy Hall. Security reports that sometime between 1 a.m. and 7 a.m. on Feb. 2, 1989 an unknown person or persons entered the computer lab on the second floor of O’Shaughnessy and took five Macintosh SE computers valued at $15,000. If you have any information about this or any crime at Notre Dame, call Crime Stoppers at 288-STOP. You won’t be asked to give your name and you’ll be eligible for a cash reward.

in doing something to stop the proliferation of all resources in the world. Without attempting many different interagency council on drugs and stopping the demand for drugs, we have found that revoking their driver's privileges will hit them where it hurts," said Modisett.

Among the panel members to speak at the conference were several federal law enforcement officials, including James Richmond, U. S. attorney for Indiana's Northern District; Agent-in-Charge of the FBI in Indiana Bill Frizvit, David McDougal, Agent-in-Charge of the Indianapolis district of the Federal Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA); and John Twomey, deputy director of the U.S. Marshals Service in Indiana.

Twomey said that unless the drug problem is put under control, "the future is bleak." He proposed a three-part solution that consists of stopping the supply of drugs, enforcing drug laws to a "zero tolerance" level and stopping the demand for drugs. McDougal echoed the sentiments of many of the speakers by calling for better drug education."

"Education about drugs and their consequences is needed, preferably at the first, second, and third grade levels."

The conference also featured presentations from local law enforcement officials such as Neil Moore, chief of police in Fort Wayne; Barrett Gunn of the South Bend Police Department's Narcotics division, and Brian Jennings, deputy director of the U.S. Attorney's Criminal Division in Fort Wayne.

Jennings' call for better distribution of funds received through seizure of drug offenders' property was one of many calls for more funding for drug programs.

According to Dunn, his division has confiscated $329,000 in cash, $2 million in drugs, and several autos and homes in the last two years. He said that the law enforcement agencies must continue to share personnel and resources in order to succeed.

Attending the conference were law enforcement officials from across Indiana including Chief of the Indiana State Police John Jennings, lawyers involved in drug enforcement, and also observers such as the director of Indiana's chapter of Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD) and a spokesman for U.S. Rep. John Hiler.

Tuesday's conference was part of a statewide tour by Gnais and his wife called "Drugs: Fighting the War the Indiana." The tour included other conferences in Merrillville and Evansville, speeches at area high schools and United States Senate hearings in Indianapolis and Fort Wayne.

WASHINGTON — Federal regulators said Tuesday that they will try to sell the Federal Asset Disposition Association, a quasi-private company created to manage and sell sour loans and real estate from failed savings institutions.

FADA in structure is a private financial institution, but it is wholly owned by the federal government.

Until early last year, it was under intense congressional scrutiny after critics complained that FADA had grown into a bloated, inefficient bureaucracy mired in political favoritism and insider dealing.

The Resolution Trust Corp., a two-month-old government agency created to handle failed S&Ls, said it will accept bids until Oct. 31 for a sale to settle no later than Nov. 30.

If no bids are acceptable, FADA will be taken over by the government and its 275 employees offered government jobs working for the RTC.

FADA manages about $3 billion in real estate and loans from failed thrifts, having disposed of $1.3 billion in the four years since it was created.

FADA’s purchaser will acquire offices in Washington, Los Angeles, Atlanta, Denver and Dallas, a computer system, office furnishings and not much else.

The sale will not include the agency’s name, stock, charter as a financial institution, cash or the right to retain government management contracts.

John Wills, president of FADA, said his organization offers buyers a core of real estate expertise ready to participate in a flood of work as the government attempts to resolve the S&L mess, including the sale of an estimated $100 billion in hard-to-sell real estate and bad loans.

“If you intend to get into the asset management business, it’s one way to way get the largest group of professionals that have expertise in managing these troubled assets coming out of the thrift industry,” he said.

Wills acknowledged past criticism, but said: “Every single rock in FADA was turned over and examined. If anything, because of the intense scrutiny, we came out of it much more sound than any comparable organization.”

Wills said about 40 companies have expressed varying degrees of interest in FADA. But industry officials believe the core of serious buyers is much smaller.

The successful bidder would have three alternatives: seek management contracts from the RTC, compete to buy property outright from the RTC or offer its management services to financial institutions and others that end up owning the S&L property, Wills said.

J. R. Robert Cos., an Alexandria, Va., company specializing in the management of distressed real estate, is among the organizations considering making an offer for FADA, according to the company chairman.

Congress continues to struggle with capital gains tax

WASHINGTON — The Senate Democratic leader accused the White House Tuesday of trying to scuttle congressional talks aimed at ending the partisan stalemate over a Republican-backed plan to cut the capital gains tax.

House and Senate leaders of both parties met for nearly two hours but reached no agreement in their dispute, which has delayed Senate work on a deficit-reduction bill.

Spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said, “We believe the capital gains provision should be a part” of the bill.

The Senate vote on capital gains later, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said, “We believe the capital gains provision should be a part” of the bill.

After Tuesday’s meeting of congressional leaders, Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, said Fitzwater’s comments had “complicated” the talks.

He added: “The administration doesn’t really care about the deficit.”

The House last week approved its own $11 billion deficit-reduction bill that contained a two-year capital gains cut, an extension of child-care programs, a rollback of Medicare benefits for elderly people with serious, long-term diseases, and other controversial provisions.

The House provision would make the maximum capital gains tax rate 19.6 percent for two years, instead of the current maximum of 28 percent (33 percent for some taxpayers).

Democrats and Republicans agree that slimming down that provision and figuring out a way to deal with the numerous initiatives in contains — is such a difficult task that avoiding the Gramm-Rudman cuts is all but impossible.

“You’re not going to avoid” the automatic cuts, said Senate Republican leader Bob Dole of Kansas. “I think we’re all pretty much in agreement on that.”

Graduate students plan for improved integration into university social life

Dear Editor:
In his column "State of the University: There's Room for Bettering" (Oct. 4, 1989), Regis Coccia astutely identifies the need for integration between the graduate and undergraduate populations here at Notre Dame. This is a problem that the Graduate Student Union (GSU) will attempt to bring the two groups into close contact.

Among other things, the GSU will attempt to bring the two groups into close contact (GSU) will attempt to bring the two groups into close contact (GSU) will attempt to bring the two groups into close contact. The GSU is presently developing better relationships with many undergraduate groups and organizations to facilitate this goal, including the Academic Council and the Student Union Board, and we hope to revitalize the Graduate/Undergraduate Committee with the help of Student Government. We will sponsor a "Graduate/Undergraduate Appreciation Week" later this year in order to create greater visibility of the graduate population on campus. In the past, the GSU has re-sponsored with Student Government a panel discussion on the controversial "Last Temptation of Christ," and this year we also hope to work together with that body to add to the intellectual as well as social life of the university.

It is true that both groups could learn much from each other, as Mr. Coccia points out. Before that can be accomplished, however, both groups need to learn much about each other. The GSU thanks Mr. Coccia for bringing this issue to the pages of The Observer. We hope that, by raising awareness of the need to integrate the two groups and then acting upon the need, we can help to improve the inner community of the university.

Incident of racial harassment at ND disrupts "Year of the Family" theme

Dear Editor:

As a black student, I have encountered some hardships at Notre Dame. My worst experience, by far, concerns the teaching methods of Father George Wiskirchen. When I was enrolled in his "Introduction to Jazz" course in Fall 1988, the professor frequently compared the African and European styles of music in a manner demeaning to the African form. For example, the rhythms of African and European were considered to be "dirty" and "clean," respectively.

After a few such lectures, I approached my feelings with Father Wiskirchen. He agreed to alter his lectures and asked me to fill out a complaint form. Unfortunately, his response was negative, for he did not feel that he was in the wrong. Therefore, the problem was taken to the provost. To the shock of the black community, no previous charge had been filed against Father Wiskirchen in his 17 years as a professor at Notre Dame. Moreover, no racial complaint form had ever existed at the University. Hence, Father Wiskirchen only received a warning from the provost about his comments.

Due partly to this incident, students experiencing racism from a professor in the future may need to complete a racial harassment form. I urge all students to report incidents of racism in order to aid in the success of the "Year of the Family."

CIA engages in necessary evils to protect human rights and justice

Dear Editor:
The world in which we live is not ideal. We live in a shadowy world in which there are forces which do not operate under the same high principles of freedom, justice and democracy that exist in the United States. To help us understand these forces, and to protect ourselves against them, we need the CIA. But more than this, we need moral men and women, with a strong commitment to the ideals of human rights to enter the CIA.

Although we are entering a period in which superpower competition is less threatening than in the past, we must not delude ourselves into thinking that the U.S. is not threatened from abroad. There are still, and always will be, forces which need to be combated.

We live in a world in which terrorists kill thousands of innocents in the skies above Scotland and Africa; in which drug lords control nations in Latin America. These forces cannot be countered with World Court decisions, which are virtually powerless against the like. America made that mistake once, in the 1920s, when well-meaning intellectuals thought they had outlawed war with the Kellogg-Briand Pact and the League of Nations.

The terrorists and drug lords of our world can be stopped only with knowledge about their actions, which the intelligence-gathering power of the CIA must continue to provide. That information must, in some cases, translate into prudential action.

Few would deny that the intelligence-gathering role of the CIA is beneficial. It is the covert activities of the CIA that bring criticism. No serious person can deny that these actions have resulted in tragic errors on occasion. Alternatively, no serious person can deny that such actions are necessary on certain occasions. Covert operations are a necessary evil.

Christian ethics and common sense demand that these tragic mistakes be corrected. Since they cannot be undone, we have a moral imperative to prevent mistakes of a similar nature from being repeated. This can be accomplished only by changing the way decisions are made. The decision of how best to covert operations, then, should be made by those with a deep commitment to democracy and human rights.

The proposal to disallow CIA recruitment at Notre Dame is not part of the solution to the CIA's troubles, but part of the problem. It is this intolerant attitude which has stunned many people of deep moral conviction from working in the CIA.

TARTUFFE

First presentation of the year is nearly flawless and brings audience into the spirit of the play

MAGGIE MACDONALD

Ascent writer

Tartuffe, originally written by Moliere, truly takes its audience through three worlds. The experience includes not only the world depicted by Moliere, but also that of the Italian commedia dell'arte and that of Washington Hall Theatre 1989 (as the program takes pains to point out). The play is concerned with the excess of religion, and Director Reginald Bain found it a fitting one to present at Notre Dame.

Before lights dim and all of the audience is seated, a character from the two other worlds enters and watches ours—audience realizes that the stage players are not the sole concern of the performance. The efforts of Set and Lighting Designer Kevin Dreyer invite the audience to delve into Tartuffe. Dreyer transformed the problem of the conspicuous architecture and design of Washington Hall—a classroom by day and a theater by night—into a blessing, and continued the design of the theater in the set, destroying the artificial physical division between the stage and the house. Additionally, the set is constructed in the manner of a stage of the commedia dell'arte, a form of comedy which influenced Moliere.

To be applauded is Bain's decision to use the English verse poetry. But indeed it also challenges the performers, but more importantly it also gave characterization clues. Although the constant rhyme and the difficult stanzas of the verse alienated the audience at times, a prose translation would have lost the sense of the pretension and hypocrisy of the characters which is central to the play.

The play is concerned with the excess of religion, and Director Reginald Bain found it a fitting one to present at Notre Dame.

Washington Hall Theatre 1989—where the audience will grow from eight to fifteen thousand as word spreads. Performances run Thursday, October 12, through Sunday, October 15, and tickets are $4 for students and senior citizens, $5 for the balcony, and $6 for the main floor.

ND series highlights ethics in Life Choices

It is lunchtime at Notre Dame. The typical student has her I.D. processed, and before she moves through the doors of the cafeteria, she is sure to grab her copy of the Observer. After carefully selecting the delicacy of the day, she makes her way to a seat and begins to eat heartily.

This scenario is not complete until the student begins to flip through the Observer. She takes careful note of the birth-day ads, the quote of the day, the Far Side, and the sport's section. The 'real news' is overlooked because of its often dreary topics. Who wants to read about the problems of immigration, homelessness, or lack of ethics in politics while eating a cheeseburger? Certainly not most students, but these are issues that cannot go unrecognized. A dedicated Notre Dame community, under the guidance of Fr. Edward Malloy and Fr. Richard Warner, has made it their goal to arouse an awareness of these issues among the American people through television.

Life Choices is a television series exploring the ethical side of social issues. It was a project that began last September when Notre Dame was asked to set up a separate religious program that would educate its viewers as a service offered by the Church. A pilot series aired in May, and it covered the topics of youth at risk, the aging, homelessness, immigration, and political ethics. It received the prestigious Gabriel Award from the National Catholic Association of Broadcasters and Communicators for its accurate portrayals. Since then, Life Choices has been contracted for thirty-nine half-hour segments over the next eighteen months, and it is estimated that its viewing audience will grow from eight million to twenty million.

Fr. Malloy believes that Life Choices is a significant extension of the University's teaching mission. Fr. Warner furthered this thought by saying that Life Choices is searching for a response from its viewers. It is a television effort that will present critical social problems and initiate discussions about what the government and individuals can do to alleviate these ailments of society.

It is a hope of the University that, within the year, this television series, accompanied by an instructional manual, will be made available for schools as a teaching aid. This project would be a service to the Church and would be completely non-profit, according to Fr. Warner.

After any half-hour segment, viewers find themselves debating the questions raised. The show forces one to do more than just passively watch; it has an effect on the viewers. It causes them to respond, to think.

This program encompasses the talents and interests of Notre Dame faculty and experts from around the country. Life Choices is Notre Dame at its best. Do not miss the opportunity to watch Life Choices. It has made this rather passive reader think. Views not only want to know more, but to do more. Viewers will have made the wrong "choice" if they dare to miss Life Choices.

Life Choices is shown on cable television, or it can be seen at 5:30 p.m. Mondays, on Channel 34 and again on Sundays at 11:30 a.m.

By STEVE MEGARGEE
Associate Sports Editor

In its college football preview issue a few years ago, Sports Illustrated gave Texas Tech the dubious honor of ugliest campus in the nation. University officials and citizens from around the Lubbock area, campus sent out enough complaints that the magazine decided to reconsider this choice.

After considering for a while, the writers concluded they were right: the first time - Texas Tech was the most unsightly educational environment in the U.S.

Aside from that, this traditional Southwest Conference rivalry has not received much attention from college football publications recently. That could all change this weekend.

With the Red Raiders having just upset Texas A&M 27-24 last weekend, the nation's ugliest campus gets set to host defending SWC champion Arkansas this Saturday. If the Red Raiders find a way to knock off the seventh-ranked Razorbacks, Texas Tech could play in the Cotton Bowl.

Things don't too much easier for a team playing in a Pac-10 Conference filled with talent and parity. Still to come on the schedule are Oregon and Washington State and at home a road date with UCLA.

Texas Tech vs. Arkansas

College Football

Arkansas is using the same strong-defense, strong-kicking game strategy that led the Hogs to a 10-1 record and near-upset of Miami last year. The Hogs are allowing just over 12 points per game, and they have connected on a record 32 consecutive field goal attempts dating back to last season (with Kendall Trainor kicking last year and Todd Wright currently holding the position).

It's too early to assume anything, but Saturday's contest between Michigan and Michigan State probably will go a long way in determining which Michigan team, Big Ten school will advance to the Rose Bowl.

The good news about this East Lansing contest is that both teams are at full strength. Michigan will start Elvis Grbac at quarterback, but Michael Taylor will be available if necessary. The Spartans have their entire crop of outstanding running backs, including Blake Ezur and Hyland Hickson, ready to go.

Bob Schmehlberger should have his Wolverines sufficiently motivated. The Michigan coach was so displeased with his offense after last weekend's 24-0 triumph over Wisconsin that Michigan fans have been calling for a change, firing coaches and players speak to the media.

Michigan State, which was so good but unlucky against Notre Dame and Miami, will be fortunate to come away with a 17-14 victory at Iowa last Saturday. The Hawkeyes refused two opportunities in the closing minutes to attempt easy field goals that would have tied the game, as Iowa coach Hayden Fry was determined to offer the game or lose it.

After tying three games last season, Fry would care not to see another tie for the next several years.

What's the matter with the Hogs?

The Hogs, who were ranked 11th in the country after opening the season with wins over Texas A&M and Purdue, have fallen to 2-3 and will now to scramble to earn an invitation to a second-tier bowl.

Washington has not exactly been playing poorly. Aside from a 45-28 loss to third-ranked Colorado, the Huskies have had chances to win in the final quarter, losing 20-17 to Arizona and 24-16 to Southern California.

Things don't too much easier for a team playing in a Pac-10 Conference filled with talent and parity. Still to come on the schedule are Oregon and Washington State and at home a road date with UCLA.

The more things change, the more they stay the same.

The University of Florida, which has never won a Southeastern Conference championship, finally wins a clutch conference game 16-13 with a last-play field goal at Louisiana State.

And the next day, Head Coach Galen Hall joins former coach Charley Pell on the university's Hall of Shame, resigning amid charge of payments to players. The university, which has made NCAA probation as much a part of its tradition as losses to arch-rival Georgia in football, also has its basketball team undergoing investigation.

"I don't feel any soreness yet, and I hope I don't," he said. "Considering the rehabilitation I've already gone through, I don't think I will."

Williams threw passes on Tuesday for the first time since the operation.

"I'm not going to target it. I wouldn't be fair," he said. "I'm just going to keep going through rehab and take it from there."

Williams was named the Redskins' starter after the final game of last season, but now is behind Mark Rypien on the depth chart. If and when Williams returns, it will be as a backup because Coach Joe Gibbs has said the job is now Rypien's to lose.

Redskins' QB to return

Associated Press

HERNDON, Va. — Washington Redskins quarterback Doug Williams, feeling no stiffness a day after zinging several passes, on Wednesday expressed renewed confidence that he will soon play again.

"Without a doubt, this season is on my mind," he said. "In fact, I'd love to be back way before the end of the season."

Williams underwent surgery to repair a herniated disk on Aug. 25. After spending much of the past few weeks lifting weights, riding a bicycle and treading on a treadmill, he threw passes on Tuesday for the first time since the operation.

"I don't feel any soreness yet, and I hope I don't," he said. "Considering rehabilitation I've already gone through, I don't think I will."

Williams threw passes up to 6 yards to Redskin trainers, and some of the throws had pretty good velocity.

"It's just part of rehabilitation," he said. "It wasn't like throwing 15 yards and out to Ricky (Sanders) or Gary (Clark). It was just a matter of going through the motion and throwing the football."

"That's what it is all about, just being there and being able to do it," he said. "Now I'm just looking forward to being able to do it more."

Williams has thrown 2,583 passes in his NFL career, including four for touchdowns as MVP of the 1988 Super Bowl. The 34-year-old saw limited action in the season after undergoing emergency appendectomy, then injured his back while running on a treadmill during the recent offseason.

He is currently on the non-football injury list and won't speculate as to how soon he could return to the active roster.

"I'm not going to target it. I wouldn't be fair," he said. "I'm just going to keep going through rehab and take it from there."

Williams was named the Redskins' starter after the final game of last season, but now is behind Mark Rypien on the depth chart. If and when Williams returns, it will be as a backup because Coach Joe Gibbs has said the job is now Rypien's to lose.

Celtics no longer need Johnson as a court leader

Associated Press

BROOKLINE, Mass. — When Brian Shaw went to Italy, the Boston Celtics went into a funk and trying to recover from foot injuries. The man who Larry Bird still "wanted by the Chinese government."

The man who Larry Bird still "wanted by the Chinese government." It probably won’t be the happiest of his 13 NBA seasons.

"DJ is a very competitive person. He’s got a lot of heart," Boston center Robert Parish said. "He doesn’t like the fact that people have written him off."

Johnson has played in five NBA all-star games. He was named to the all-defensive first or second teams every year from 1979 through 1987. He is one of only 11 players with 5,000 points and 5,000 assists.

But it wouldn’t keep up with the up-tempo style Coach Jimmy Rodgers tried to install last season. And even before Shaw signed with II Messenger last Aug. 9, the search for a point guard had begun.

The Celtics got New Jersey’s permission to bring John Bagley, still a member of the Nets, to their summer camp in late July. After Shaw left, there were reports that the Celtics might be interested in free agent Gerald Henderson and Miami draft choice Sherman Douglas.

Last Thursday, the day before Boston began its preseason camp, it traded its second-round draft picks in 1991 and 1993 for Bagley. Kevin Unwang and Charles Smith, a free agent from Georgetown, also are in camp as point guards.

Last Friday, Johnson refused to talk to reporters who flocked to the opening of camp. "You can draw your own conclusions," the normally cooperative Johnson said.

Rodgers has concluded that Johnson may still be able to play point guard but couldn’t handle the spot for 40 minutes a game over an extended period.

Johnson often played off the guard last season while teamed with Shaw.

"We’ve been looking all summer for a way to strengthen that particular position, the point position," Rodgers said.

Johnson “has the versatility to do whatever we ask of him and I think that’s the way he’s going to enter into the picture."

Johnson missed 10 games last season, four early in the season with an Achilles tendon injury that continued to hamper him when he played and the last six with an ankle injury.

"He worked hard this summer. I think harder than he had in the past couple of seasons," trainer Lacerte said.

"He worked hard this summer. I think harder than he had in the past couple of seasons," trainer Lacerte said.

The concern for a point guard wasn’t the concern (for) what DJ could do or couldn’t do," forward Kevin McHale said. "It was how long he could do it for ... If you have to play DJ 45 minutes, that’s going to be a hell of a toll on DJ." General Manager Jan Volk denied that he has overlooked DJ. Johnson missed practice last week with a sprained right ankle but worked out at full speed Tuesday.

"He’s been a guy who always come through in the clutch for us," said Reggie Lewis, who is expected to start at off guard. "I still feel that he’ll still be that guy."

Bird admitted that Johnson can’t race up the floor with the ball like faster guards, but said, "We’re not a running team. It takes McHale and me 20 seconds to get up the court anyway so ... if DJ gets (the ball) up quick, it’d just be him and the other guard up there so he might as well wait on the rest of us."

Yet even Bird, one of Johnson’s biggest boosters, said, "John Bagley is the type of guy that we needed. We needed somebody to come in and push the ball up the court."

Although Rodgers said "we’re looking for a big year from Dennis," Johnson still has to prove that he’s healthy and can contribute at either guard position.

But his teammates stubbornly defended him.

When people “start talking about our backcourt his name was very seldom mentioned (last season), except trade rumors or ‘He’s all done,’ ” Parish said. "He has a lot of pride. I think people will see that this year."
Dahlen leads Rangers to 5-4 victory over Flames

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Ulf Dahlen scored two of New York’s three power-play goals as the unbeaten Rangers opened their home season by holding off Calgary 5-4 Wednesday night. Dahlen leads the Flames’ first line. In winning their third straight game, their best start since 1983, the Rangers got another steady performance in goal from John Vanbiesbrouck, who made 32 saves while the Flames were outshooting New York 35-23. In his third start, Vanbiesbrouck has allowed only eight goals on 108 shots.

Calgary, which won 4-2 at New Jersey Tuesday night, trailed 2-2 with five minutes to play, but rallied on goals by Janis Dukarts, who scored his first career goal, a seemingly harmless slap shot from the right circle that went into an open side of the crease on the power play at 12:42.

Theodore Fleury at 16:45. But the Bruins’ elation was short-lived. Eighteen seconds after his goal, Jim Craig Janney and Ed Chiodo of the Sabres scored within a 3-2-0.

New York’s first goal came on a power-play goal by Phil Housley (6) and Mike Foligno (17) each scored a goal as the Buffalo Sabres pounded the hapless Toronto Maple Leafs last night by a score of 7-1.

Mike Liut stopped 24 shots in his first start of the season and Paul MacDermid scored twice in the first period as the Hartford Whalers downed Washington 4-1 Wednesday night.

MacDermid scored the Whalers’ first two goals in a span of 4:50 as Hartford won its second straight game to even its record at 2-2-0. Center Rodney Cromwell had a goal and two assists while Ed Kastelle completed the Hartford scoring. The start was Liut’s first since an 8-2 loss to Washington last March 18, a game in which Dino Ciccarelli scored four goals en route to a seven-point night.

MacDermid connected from the right post at 3:38 on a pass from Devin Eaves, then scored from the slot on a 5-on-3 power play at 8:28. Ferraro made it 3-0 at 12:17 on the second of two assists by Mikael Anderson.

"When I first heard about the fire I said, ‘Thank God my kids have enough sense not to do something like that,’” said UI fencing coach Art Schankin. "I’ve never had any problem with these kids.”

UI Police Chief Paul Dollins said the three entered Memorial Stadium before dawn to burn words into the AstroTurf playing field using charcoal lighter fluid. When the fire began to burn out of control, they fled, Dollins said.

UI firefighters extinguished the blaze.

Scalpers hike prices for Series tix

BY PETE CASTELLI
Sports Writer

D'Juan Francisco (32) and Todd Lyght (1) will have to be on their toes against Heisman candidate Dee Dowis.

The Bay Bridge World Series brought not only a couple of the nation's best baseball teams to Candlestick Park, but another selling opportunity for many brokers and scalpers, with tickets going for $5,000 and more on the black market.

The high cost of the tickets means that those who paid $1,600 a game for the Golden Tickets in Dallas are being asked by Bill Shine, a tax accountant who had season tickets. The sky-high $15,000 price is too much for most fans, however.

The key to making it illegal are the location and timing. The tickets must be sold on site and on the day of the event.

Women's golf travels to Franklin Invitational

BY PETE CASTELLI
Sports Writer

The Irish women's golf team is resuming play after a long layoff. They have been preparing for the next tournament, which is this weekend at the University of Indianapolis, Miami of Ohio, Bradley, and Tennessee Tech. After the competition, head coach Tom Hanlon is optimistic about the team's chances in the October 12th tournament.

"I'm very positive going into this competition," said Hanlon. "We have the talent, we play to our capabilities, and there is no reason why we shouldn't win."

The team will be directed to the national championship last season. They have a young but very talented team.

"We have a young but very promising team," said Hanlon. "With hard work and effort, we can be a strong team in our area."
