Character and domestic issues dominate debate

By SANDY WIEGAND
Assistant News Editor

Questions of character and attention to the domestic front figured prominently in a debate between the Notre Dame College Democrats and College Republicans Wednesday, but political messages surfaced.

Junior Jerry Boyle and sophomore Kevin Schmidt represented the student Republican club, and sophomore Chris Setti and sophomore Andrew Holmgren represented the student Democrat club. Panelists were government professors Suzanne Marillie, John Roos and Patty Davis. Moderator was professor Shayan O'Brien, government chair.

Schmitt questioned Democratic nominee Bill Clinton's moral authority to lead the country through trials of time. Setti responded by referring to Clinton's opposition to the Vietnam War. "Sometimes I think it is more patriotic to tell your country that they're doing something wrong than to follow it blindly," Boyle later repeated Vice President Dan Quayle's question, "If there was an international crisis tomorrow, who would you trust?"

Setti charged Bush with ignoring domestic issues, and Boyle answered that Bush's policies for the domestic front have been undermined by Congress.

Later a member of the audience asked how Bush would work with a new Congress after the election if it were still predominantly Democratic. Boyle said "gridlock would be better" than implementation of Clinton policies.

The students also discussed the following:

Power to shape judiciary ignored in campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) — The next president could choose to get a fast start on what may become his longest-lasting legacy — shaping the federal courts and, through them, molding American law. None of the candidates has seemed to notice.

About 100 of 828 federal judgeships are waiting to be filled, but three debates yielded not a single comment about how George Bush, Bill Clinton or Ross Perot would use such opportunities to affect a generation of justice.

So what can be expected as the winner names scores of trial and appellate judges, and perhaps appoints justices to the Supreme Court's balance of power?

"Whoever is president the next four years will be able to change dramatically the dynamics of the federal courts," said Steven Shapiro of the American Civil Liberties Union. "This was much more of an election issue four years ago, but it retains enormous political resonance."

Thomas Jipping of the conservative Free Congress Foundation agreed. "Federal courts face a far different future if Clinton rather than Bush is controlling judicial appointments," Jipping said.

Terry Eastland of the conservative Ethics and Public Policy Center noted that, historically, an average of two Supreme Court vacancies occur during each four-year presidential term. But he said, "With the court so deeply split on abortion and several other significant issues, one appointment takes on greater importance."

Abortion seems to be the only legal issue mobilizing voters. The "outcome of this election will determine whether the court will allow states to outlaw abortion," said Kate Michelman of the National Abortion Rights Action League. "This is not just a test of change, but of critical importance to women for 40 years to come, an opportunity to secure the constitutional protections recognized in Roe vs. Wade."

Responsibility for actions and basic common sense must be used if students wish to avoid confrontations with S.U.D.S. (Stop Underage Drinking and Sales) and the excise police, according to Sgt. James Moon of the South Bend Police Department and Sara Bewley of the Indiana State Excise Police.

Moon and Bewley spoke last night at a program titled "Get to Know the Law Before the Law Gets to Know You," an open forum presented by the Office of Drug and Alcohol Education as part of the National Alcohol Awareness Week.

The S.U.D.S. task force was created in 1984 and was established in South Bend in 1986, largely in response to the problem of drinking by high school students, Moon said. It is comprised of members of the law enforcement forces of South Bend, Mishawaka, St. Joseph's County, and the Indiana State Excise Police.

Members of S.U.D.S. raid bars and parties where there is probable cause of underage drinking because they want to prevent drunk students from putting themselves in potentially dangerous situations, according to Moon. Such situations include traffic accidents, robbery, assault, and rape.

"S.U.D.S. is mainly a preventive task force," Bewley said. "We try to stop things before they happen since we're concerned about the public."

Decisions to raid bars or parties are based on the number of complaints and on suspicion of underage drinking by members of S.U.D.S. This suspicion can come from personal observations or from reports by undercover police, Moon said.

It is up to the discretion of the officer whether or not breathalyzer tests will be offered. Underage students who refuse to take the test receive tickets for consumption of alcohol by a minor, according to Moon.

If it is their first offense, students get a pre-trial diversion from the attorney's office. They are then sentenced to a certain number of hours of community service and placed on probation.

Rally to educate campus about Clinton-Gore ticket

By DANA ANDERSON
News Writer

The College Democrats are attempting to educate the campus about the Clinton-Gore ticket by holding a political rally today which will include several speakers and three bands, according to club president Andrew Holmgren.

The rally will feature the presidents of both the ND and SMC chapters of the College Democrats as speakers. In addition, incumbent Tim Hoefer, member of the U.S. House of Representatives, will probably participate as a speaker.

Speakers will cover topics including Bill Clinton, George Bush and 12 years of a Repub­ lican executive branch, and the importance of voting.

Sgt. Moon: Common sense necessary to avoid confrontations with S.U.D.S.

The Democrats not only hope to attract more people to the rally but also get them interested in the Clinton-Gore ticket, but also to pull together all the Clinton people on campus for a "farelwell to George Bush party," according to Holmgren. Campus bands Chico, Grope for Luna, and Dislocation will be performing at the rally.

Another goal of the rally is to encourage people to vote and take an interest in public affairs, whether they are Republican or Democrat. "I feel that there is not a lot of interest in public affairs and being active about them here on campus, especially as compared to other universities where these issues would stir up big campus debates, said Holmgren.

INSIDE COLUMN

An interesting phenomenon develops in the back of everyone's mind at certain times in their life. Many people will not acknowledge the validity and importance of this phenomenon. Others will dismiss it while saying that it is not something that they should not even worry about it. Still others will ignore it wishing that everything will get better on its own. Unfortunately, the only real way to deal with this phenomenon is to confront it head on.

For ten years now, I have worked in many different corporations and organizations. Everywhere I go I see people who have this phenomenon in the back of their head. In some places it is very evident; for other people it is very subtle; for a fortunate few it does not cause problems because they have answered the dilemma. Unfortunately, there are just not enough individuals in this world who have arrived at the point where they can say they understand what the phenomenon means and how they should deal with it.

The phenomenon occurs in individuals when they reach a point at which the work they are doing no longer bears any meaning to them anymore. They slowly come to realize that the activities, job satisfaction, or employment they have maintained for some time now no longer offers the same amount of fulfillment that it used to. As they reflect on the same activities that they have done umpteen times before, they start to understand that the fun is no longer present and it has now been replaced with a feeling of automated obligation. The spirit and enthusiasm that initially got them involved has vanished in lieu of a heartless void feeling.

Many people realize that they can never really be free of this feeling unless they face it head on, they will continue to have bouts with this phenomenon called "If only." They say "If only I could have done umpteen times before, they start to understand that the fun is no longer present and it has now been replaced with a feeling of automated obligation. The spirit and enthusiasm that initially got them involved has vanished in lieu of a heartless void feeling.

They say "If only I could have done it," or "If only I was as motivated as they are, I could then get decent grades." They also say, "If only I could be as committed as she is, I could then get to her position." The point here is that as long as someone compares themselves to someone else, they will not be able to overcome this phenomenon because they are doomed to remain in the same situation they are fretting about.

Mock presidential debate an attempt to inform SMC students

By LAURA FERGUSON
News Writer

In an attempt to inform the student body and provide an arena to learn about election issues the Saint Mary’s College Political Science Club sponsored the 1992 Presidential Mock Debate last night.

The format consisted of two students representing each candidate and a faculty panel representing various academic departments asking the bulk of the questions. Representing the Republican incumbent candidate George Bush were Katy Howe and Martha Conlin and representing Democratic candidate Bill Clinton were Julie Marsh and Suzanne Stachler.

Stachler said there was a need for a platform of change and reform and that the economy was stagnant under Bush.

Conlin stated there have been "massive changes under the current administration including the reunification of Germany and the end to the Cold War. Further changes involving the scaling down, streamlining, reform and revitalization of government."

There was no representing team for the Ross Perot ticket because during the organizational stage of the debate no one volunteered so no Perot voice was established in the research.

A total of 30 questions were posed to the candidates' panels by the faculty panel. Among the pressing topics were health care, Clinton's lack of military service and views on war, affirmative action programs, and ideas on how Clinton would have applied if he had been in Bush's position for the previous presidential term.

Howe from the Bush team stated that the greatest problem in health care is rising costs and offered possible solutions to the problem.

"Insurance should be affordable and care available to everyone. We must find the least costly and most effective treatment possible," said Howe.

The Clinton panel also mandated insurance reforms and clinics for primary care functions.

"We also believe that preventative health care in the form of education is important as well as the need to simplify paperwork. Also there should be no coverage for unnecessary surgery," said Stachler.

In the area of military, both panels agreed that the U.S. military must maintain superiority among the world.

Howe from the Bush panel claimed that Bush was a strong, dedicated military leader while Clinton's representatives defended his lack of military experience.

"Clinton did not feel that the Vietnam War needed to be fought to hold the United States together so he did not participate," said Marsh. "However, world partnership is fundamental for global crises. He also believes that international sanctions should be used and he supports nuclear deterrent."

Concerning the question of affirmative action programs both panels were in favor of advances.

"Bush feels that quotas are a hindrance and the government needs to promote advancement so that all may share in the American dream and break the cycle of poverty," said Howe.

Stachler said that Clinton also is in favor of affirmative action programs and that the job market should mirror the population. She said Clinton also supports Title Nine, which prohibits sexual discrimination and the Equal Right Amendment.

In response to the inquiry of what Clinton would have done if put in the position of Bush, Stachler stated that Clinton would not have waited as long before acting on the economy.

"If elected, Clinton would make reduction of the deficit the first priority via spending cuts."

Conlin responded that Clinton's figures for the economy don't add up. She said that Bush purposed streamlining already but the answer lies in less bureaucracy and the need to cut government waste.

In conclusion for the Clinton panel, Marsh stated that Bush is out of ideas. "It is now time to put the people first, strive to develop industry, tap our own resources, and protect the right of women to choose."

"Congressional language and messages concerning Arkansas including low state ranking in adult illiteracy."

Due to the informative nature of the debate no winner was announced.

Professors: Bush's ND address ceremonial with political message

By HEIDI DECKELMANN
News Writer

President Bush's commencement address given last spring at the University of Notre Dame was ceremonial in form but political in message, according to Carla Johnson and John Pauley professors of Communications at Saint Mary's College.

Pauley and Johnson followed a presentation of Bush's address with a critique of the political language and messages contained in the speech in a format that was similar to an earlier presentation on Gov. Bill Clinton's address given at the political rally earlier in the semester.

"The theme of Bush's commencement address, family values, later became one of the Republican campaign themes the speech would then be considered political," said Johnson.

Pauley said, "Bush blended a policy statement on the limits of the American Government with a charge to the graduates."

The presentation was, "Informative, unbiased, and helped me view political speeches more effectively by ignoring candidates' persuasive abilities," said Saint Mary's Senior, Val Klassen.

The presentation was cosponsored by the Department of Communications, Dance, and Theatre and The Popular Culture Group.

for six months to a year. Second and subsequent offenses warrant a court appearance and are punishable up to 60 days and $500, Moon added.

In the case of public intoxication, Moon explained that an officer can make a charge based on his own judgment of the suspect's behavior, regardless of whether they give a breathalyzer or not. Ambulance bosses have the right to demand a breathalyzer test to prove their sobriety. It is decided in court if a conviction will result from the officer's charge of public intoxication.

Excise police officers enforce the laws concerning alcoholic beverages, according to Bewley. They enter bars dressed in civilian clothes when they suspect that there are minors in the bar. Students are required by Indiana law to show proof of their identity to these officers.

There are approximately 56 excise police in Indiana, with four or five in each county. They travel to certain districts in response to complaints and observations of underage drinking, Bewley said.

In regards to off-campus parties, Bewley emphasized the serious liability of hosts: "Social hosts have the same responsibility as professional hosts," she said. They must therefore use common sense when underage people wish to attend their parties, for they will be held liable for furnishing alcohol to minors.

Finally, according to Moon, police officers have the right to search houses and apartments that they raided if they suspect minors are present. Confiscated kegs are returned to liquor stores, with refunds going to local or state alcohol programs.

regulating public schools to a secondary form of education....You cannot reform public schools without money."

Boyle responded, "You don't throw money at a problem...what is needed is teachers and students who are willing to learn. You say "what's going to happen to public schools?" Of course they're going to close down because they stink."

"Family values:" Holmgren questioned Bush's veto of the Family Leave Bill, calling it contradictory to the president's "family values" rhetoric. Boyle said the bill would have put an undue burden on small businesses.

"Health care:" Boyle said, "If you ask people in health care which plan they like best, they say the Bush plan." Setti responded that the industry favors the president's plan because it allows them to continue to "gouge" customers.

Rally

"Hopefully this rally will help motivate students to take more interest in the national affairs going on around them."

Besides planning this rally, the College Democrats have organized their 300 members to take part in a campus-wide canvas of Clinton material three or four days before the election.

Members will campaign door to door throughout the campus. In addition a group of the Democrats is tentatively headed to Arkansas for a victory party on November 3, pending the outcome of the election.

New CPR guidelines: Call ambulance first

CHICAGO (AP) — Get to a phone and call an ambulance before you start cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR), experts say. In a reversal, doctors and other experts now recommend that lone rescuers postpone CPRs on adults until they summon help.

That's because CPR rarely saves lives unless it is followed quickly by advanced medical treatment, such as defibrillation to jump-start the heart, the experts said in today's Journal of the American Medical Association.

The old recommendation was that a lone rescuer give a heart-attack victim one minute of CPR before calling.

The change is one of 19 drafted by the Fifth National Conference on CPR and Emergency Cardiac Care.

"CPR was taught to lay people in the 1970s with a great deal of enthusiasm that it was going to save a lot of lives," said Dr. John Paraskeos, chairman of the conference of 512 professionals in February, "It turns out, it doesn't unless it's backed up by adequate emergency systems and advanced care."

Paraskeos is director of diagnostic cardiology at the University of Massachusetts Medical Center in Worcester.

The North Atlantic Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA): Setti said without minimum wage and environmental policies in Mexico comparable to those in the United States, businesses would move southward. Boyle answered, "There's no reason why they can't go there right now..." He added that although it might take 10 years, Mexico eventually would raise its standards to U.S. levels without government prodding.

Yugoslavia: Both sides said their candidate does not favor U.S. military action there, but Setti went on, "Waiting an watching while people die is not the way to run a foreign policy...If it comes down to military force, that might need to be used in a limited fashion."

Setti said the U.S. should first try diplomacy though. Boyle said, "You have to decide whether it's a just war or a war you can win." The war is "terrible," he said, but guerrilla warfare and the fact that boundary disputes go back so far would make a war especially harsh.

"Deficit spending: Boyle said Andrew Holmgren and Chris Setti (left to right) represent the Democrats in a mock debate on the issues between the College Democrats and the College Republicans.

Bush's tax cuts would increase revenue to help reduce the deficit. Setti said Clinton would cut 25 percent of the White House staff, $100 billion in defense, cut troops in Europe, and make Europe and Japan shoulder more of the cost of their own defense, to reduce the deficit.
Symposium important to business students

By NICK RIOS
News Writer

The up and coming Ethics of Global Sourcing and Technology in the 1990s club is hosting a Speaker Symposium on Friday that every student in business and those planning on studying business should not miss, according to Rich Dyer, one of the club vice presidents.

The Ethics of Global Sourcing and Technology in the 1990s club was established last year and is under the presidency of Tim Klaus. "Our club is trying to bring in speakers who can give first hand advice about their experience in the business world," said Dyer.

Dyer added that the speakers making presentations on Friday will be addressing ethical values in business. "One of the most important things our club is trying to get across is that ethical values cannot be separated from business, and that we must have them in mind in every decision we make," said Dyer.

Among the speakers that will attend the Symposium on Friday are:
- George Goulart, senior vice president of Coca-Cola Inc.
- Mark Schmid, vice president of Information Systems, Walmart Inc.
- Gary O’Connor, president & C.E.O., G.E. O’Connor & Company Inc.
- Steven Hronec, director of manufacturing, Arthur Andersen
- Patrick Tesler, vice president Engineering, Bendix Auto System, North America
- Kerford Murchant, senior business development consultant, Amoco Chemical Co.

The speakers will address the decision-making process of a company that decides to go into an underdeveloped country, and how the company’s action affects the local people.

Schmid will talk about how he uses information in his computer to lower his product’s cost and to produce a top-quality product.

"As students we need to be responsible in the future of turning the knowledge we receive in classroom into smart decisions that will provide for a better tomorrow," Dyer said. "It is time we let the world know that as Notre Dame students we will carry our ethical values into every profession we go in the future."

O'Briens to receive Dooley Award

Julie and Sean O’Brien of Bath, Pa., will receive the Dr. Thomas Dooley Award for outstanding humanitarian service, according to the Notre Dame Alumni Association.

The O’Briens are both 1986 ND graduates and were married on campus in 1987. Sean served as the Phoenix Mountain Club president from 1989-1992 during which time Julie served as club secretary.

The couple helped establish the club’s first Summer Service Project, a drug and alcohol rehabilitation center for women with children in Allentown, Pa. This year the club sponsored the volunteer work of Christine Rudolph, a Notre Dame junior from Cleveland.

The O’Briens will receive the award January 29 at the winter meeting of the Alumni Association’s Board of Directors.

The Alumni Association has also announced the winner of the 1993 John Cavanaugh Award for outstanding public service. George Strake, Jr. of Houston, a 1957 graduate, will receive the award. He has been active in Texas Republican politics. He will receive the award next Sept. 18 during halftime ceremonies of the Notre Dame/Michigan State football game.

Robert Sanford of South Bend will receive the John Cardinal O’Brien Award for distinguished service to the University. An active ND fundraiser, Sanford is a member of the University’s Sorin Society and of the Radio Guild, for benefactors who include ND in their estates. Sanford will receive the award June 19 at the Alumni Association’s 50-Year Club Reunion.

French doctor in AIDS scandal is jailed in Paris

PARIS (AP) — A French doctor in AIDS scandal, who returned Wednesday to be jailed for his part in an AIDS scandal, was released on Wednesday after pleading responsibility for poisoning of hundreds of hemophiliacs with AIDS-infected blood.

Dr. Michel Garretta was whisked away by police from Charles de Gaulle Airport after arriving from Boston, where he had worked for a medical equipment firm, to face a four-year prison sentence.

His case was taken under resort to La Saint prison in southern Paris.

Garretta told the Agence France Presse (AFP) news agency on his flight home that he "absolutely refuses to assume the collective responsibility for contaminating hemophiliacs, which is a rumor and a lie."

This echoed the complaints of AIDS activists and the families of hemophiliacs who consider Garretta a scapegoat and say top government officials were responsible.

While Syrians talk peace in D.C., hatred is at home

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — The Syrians may be participating in Arab-Israeli peace talks in Washington, but there are many who are shedding no tears over Israel's killed this week by Arab guerrillas.

"I teach my children that Israel is the enemy," said Mohammed Aziz Shafii, dean of Damascus University's law school and an expert on international law.

"Israel has an expansionist appetite. It is well-documented that they want to extend into the biblical land of the Jews, extends from the Nile to the Euphrates."

That comment from one of Syria's most respected and learned citizens epitomizes the feelings of most of his 12.5 million countrymen, who have been Israel's most implacable foes for 44 years.

For them, the recent attacks on Israel's self-designated "security zone" in south Lebanon, a border strip held in one form or another by the Israelis since 1978, are acts of legitimate resistance by the Lebanese against an occupying power.

So are attacks by Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, captured by Israel in the 1967 war.

A senior Syrian official said it is "the inalienable right of an occupied people to resist those who occupy their land."

Garretta, head of the National Center for Blood Transfusion in 1985 when the infected blood was supplied to hemophiliacs, said he returned to France to face justice.

"I wasn't running away. I never thought of avoiding the judicial system of my country," Garretta told AFP. "I feel at the same time deep injustice and total disgust."

Before leaving Boston, Garretta said told reporters that the tragedy was the "collective fault of the system."

The decisions I made were always in the open and were always made with other people," he said. "To pick out one single person, or four people as in the trial, when there were dozens, even hundreds involved, flies in the face of justice."

Garretta was one of four former health officials tried for allowing the transfusions with contaminated blood to take place. Some 1,200 hemophiliacs were infected with HIV.

Boris Yeltsin

MOSCOW (AP) — President Boris Yeltsin went on the offensive Wednesday against his hard-line political foes, banning a new right-wing group and ordering an opposition-control security force disbanded.

The one-two punch seemed designed to keep the hard-liners off Russia's political center, which Yeltsin is trying to hold as the economy slides further into crisis and his re-election hopes dim.

Yeltsin took the step after hard-line lawmakers rebuffed his delay to review the next parliament session and after weeks of criticism from many sides, including Mikhail Gorbatchev, the former Soviet president who is still unpopular at home but whose words carry weight abroad.

He ban the members of the parliament — the base of Yeltsin's opposition — who are designed to curb his powers and slow economic reforms during a session of the Congress of People's Deputies set to convene Thursday.

Is the economy recovering or not?

NEW YORK (AP) — One day the government says the economy is robust again because consumer spending has improved. The next day it says consumer spending actually isn’t so strong. Is the economy recovering or not?

Taken together, the numbers reported Tuesday and Wednesday, like the jumble of other government statistics on the economy, are open to just about any spin that economists or politicians wish to put on them.

President Bush’s re-election campaign called the report of a 2.7 percent growth rate in the third quarter, which was double the expected pace, “very good news” and said it proves his economic stewardship hasn’t been so bad after all.

“We have now had six straight quarters of growth in the United States,” Bush said in a Tuesday speech. “And yet the Democrats keep telling us that whatever increase in spending there was came out of people’s savings, and not because they’re necessarily making more money.

“That can’t go on forever,” said Marcus Jones, an economist at Deutsche Bank Capital Corp.

The rise in personal income was skewed to the plus side by one-time increases in government spending to aid the victims of Hurricane Andrew, increased farm aid, and a 6.9 percent increase in military spending that reversed a five-quarter decline.

Excluding the effects of the hurricane and farm subsidies, personal income rose 0.1 percent, after falling 0.6 percent in August.

Another significant contributor to the third-quarter growth was a surge in business inventories — more goods piling up. That is potentially bad news.

“Unless demand revives promptly, there will be some production cutbacks necessary, which will mean either fewer hours worked or fewer people working,” Jones said.

In another confusing sign, orders to factories for durable goods fell a seasonally adjusted 0.4 percent in September, the government reported Wednesday.

For the economy to turn decisively positive, consumers must feel confident that their incomes will grow or at least not fall, and they have to start buying, most economists agree.

The same day the Bush administration was ballyhooing the third-quarter increase in economic growth, a widely followed measurement of consumer confidence in the economy showed a big drop in October, the fourth straight monthly decline.

“Clearly, if there is a pickup in the economy, it’s not affecting consumers so far,” said Fabian Lundberg, the board’s head of consumer research.

New claims for state unemployment insurance have fallen for three consecutive weeks.

Report: Durable goods orders fall for the third consecutive month

WASHINGTON (AP) — Orders to U.S. factories for durable goods such as cars and computers fell in September for the third consecutive month, the government said Wednesday in a report taken as an omen for manufacturing employment.

The Commerce Department said orders fell a seasonally adjusted 0.4 percent to $118.9 billion last month. It was the first time orders in the durable goods category fell three months in a row since January-March 1991, during the depths of the recession, and it was the fourth decline in five months.

In other two reports, the government said Americans’ personal income rebounded in September from the effects of Hurricane Andrew and the federal budget deficit set a new record during the fiscal year ended Sept. 30.

The latest statistics came as President Bush and Bill Clinton clashed over the economy in separate television appearances just six days before Election Day.

“Our economy is doing better than the world economy,” Bush said on ABC’s “Good Morning America.” He cited a Tuesday report showing a 2.7 percent third-quarter growth rate in the gross domestic product.

But Clinton countered on NBC’s “Today” show that the GDP report amounted to a one-time blip and said, “You can’t evaluate anyone on one three-month performance.”

Although much of the durable goods drop was concentrated in the volatile aircraft and defense industries, economists said it illustrated the stop-and-go nature of the economy’s long climb out of recession.

They were especially concerned that the backlog of unfilled orders for durable goods fell 1.3 percent, the 13th consecutive monthly decline, to $452.6 billion, the lowest level since December 1988.

That’s a sign that factories are easily keeping up with the flow of new orders with their current workforce, they said.

“Since last summer, what’s been going out the door in shipments is more than what’s been coming in the door in new orders,” said economist David Munro of High Frequency Economics, a New York consulting firm.

BERKELEY campus crooner singer wins in court

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — A campus crooner had something to sing about Wednesday after a judge dismissed charges that his alfresco concerts were a breach of the peace.

"This is great," Rick Starr said after the hearing in Berkeley Municipal Court. "We're aiming for the Fairmont," he said of the swanky hotel and lounge on San Francisco's Nob Hill.

Starr, 46, was in court to face a charge of disturbing the peace.

Thomas Ventresco, administrator at the University of California at Berkeley, filed a complaint that Starr's serenades were striking a sour note. The stress of working 50 yards from Starr's off-key concerts "caused me to lose sleep at night," he said.

Starr, who contended he was protected by the First Amendment, faced a possible sentence of 90 days or a $400 fine.

After prosecutor declined to take the case 1, Judge Julie Conger dismissed the charge and Starr was free to go.

He didn't waste time, treating a news conference to "I Will Wait for You," from the movie "Umbrellas of Cherbourg." Still, Ventresco will have to do without Starr's vocal offerings because he won't be returning to his post on a university plaza.

"He's been kicked upstairs as far as we're concerned," said Flora Einstein, who describes herself as Starr's publicist-mother.

Indiana shopping malls gear up for 'Malloween'

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Shopping malls statewide are gearing up for "Malloween" as more wary parents are skipping the neighborhoods and taking their little ghosts and goblins to the mall for Halloween trick-or-treating.

It's a trend that's growing in popularity nationwide.

"Parents are scared of sending their kids out on the street," said Keith Foe, a spokesman for the International Council of Shopping Centers. "They feel safer going to the mall where there is an organized program."

Four-thousand children from Indiana, Illinois and Kentucky are expected at Eastland Mall in Evansville on Saturday for Halloween fun.

All 150 stores will have candy for the children and other special events between 4 p.m. and 7 p.m., said spokeswoman Amy Petitjean.

"We assume the parents would rather have their children roaming around the mall than roaming the city's streets," Petitjean added.

At Southtown Mall in Fort Wayne, the largest in the state with 177 stores, 3,000 trick-or-treaters are expected for candy, games and a costume contest.

"Halloween isn't quite what it used to be," said spokeswoman Shelly Greenwald, "and we're trying to keep everybody occupied until all they have to do is go home and go to sleep."

The fun at Southtown begins at 5 p.m. and continues through 9 o'clock, just as it has for several years, Greenwald said.

In Indianapolis, Castleton Square Mall has stocked up on 200,000 pieces of candy, spokesman Kurt Ashburn said.

"We bought extra candy this year so we don't run out," he said.

Jan Evras, a spokeswoman for Washington Square Mall in Evansville, said the 2,000 or so children expected there Saturday won't create a boost in sales for the merchants.

State parties injected millions to 1992 election

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican and Democratic parties at the state level have quietly injected at least $35 million of their own money in a massive effort to mobilize and influence voters before Election Day, an Associated Press review of the 53 states has found.

In at least 14 states, local parties also have provided another avenue for “soft-money” donations from unions and corporations, which are banned from directly contributing to federal campaigns, the AP found.

Democrats get reservations in D.C. for Inauguration Day

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Republicans are talking upset but it’s the Democrats who are reserving the hotel suites along 16th Street and down Pennsylvania Avenue for Inauguration Day.

“There’s a lot more requests from Democrats,” said Hotel Washington’s Debbie Cochran, recalling four years ago when George Bush, and not Michael Dukakis, would lead the Jan. 20 inauguration parade.

She said Democratic backers of Bill Clinton are booking 50-room blocks at the hotel, located on the parade route, despite the advance, non-refundable payments. “They’re the ones who are like gangbusters, getting their money in. They think they’re going to win.”

But hoteliers said Republicans are also undeterred by top rates, four-night-stay minimums and up-front payments. Many hotels are deferring payments until after Nov. 3, when supporters of two candidates will realize that Washington in January is not where they want to be.

Voters seem to be shifting their party allegiances

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Michigan county famous for its disillusioned blue-collar Democrats has helped put Republicans in the White House three times. But the failed “Reagan Democrats” of Macomb County are among the many voter groups that appear to be shifting allegiances this year.

From young people and independents to the upper-income Americans whose taxes he vows to raise, Democrat Bill Clinton is leading the field among groups his party lost or split in recent elections.

President Bush, who won the White House 54-46 percent over Democrat Michael Dukakis in 1988, is still favored among white Protestants and Southern white males. But the rest of the GOP coalition that’s dominated White House elections since 1980 is more fragmented.

The lackluster economy is the primary thing working against Bush this year. There are other factors aggravating his difficulties: Clinton’s Southern background, economic focus and carefully crafted moderate image, and maverick Ross Perot’s appeal to men and independents.

Bush’s poll showings have been mired in the 30s for weeks, reflecting dissatisfaction among a variety of voting groups — women, young voters, independents, working-class ethnics, upper-income Americans and even Republicans.

Four years ago the economy was a big magnet pulling all these voters toward the Republican Party,” said Larry Hagick, managing editor of the Gallup Poll. Many of them feel closer to the Democrats on social issues, he said.

Dear Editor:

I am writing in reference to the article by the Siegfried Slammers football team (The Observer, Oct. 13, 1992). First, they begin, "the outcome of the game was determined not by the players and their abilities but listened by the referees." Well, I am sorry that they feel that way, but I know of at least 25 women on our team that feel otherwise.

Yes, the referees have a certain amount of (or lack of) control over what goes on before their eyes. But it is still the players that determine the outcome of the game.

On their second point, I totally agree with them. It is very hard to referee these games reliably and with complete knowledge of the rules. After one of our games, I requested that the referees be required to watch the rules video tape again (a refresher course, if you will) because we felt that they did not know even the basic rules.

We have been hit by "bad officiating." In one of our victories, we were outganged nine to two. But the point is, we overcame, and we came away with the win regardless.

But now I guess I should move on to the point upon which they are entirely wrong. To be honest, as I write this letter I really don't even remember all of the "it was this down" or how many plays were run. But what I do remember is what they call a third time-out.

One of the Farley coaches had asked the referee "How much time?" which he interpreted as "Time?" The funny thing was that when the head ref signalled time-out, he even signalled that the Siegfried team had called it.

Needless to say, we were all shocked that Siegfried coaches would call a time-out, and so we did not look "a gift horse in the mouth." The referee then informed us that we still had one time-out remaining, which we later used to set up our fourth down play.

So now it was fourth and six, and the coach's protest brought out to the soul of holy which needs be filled. To climb the highest mountain, to overcome the lost, we ain't gonna be nothing but weak. But unless we try to get it high, peace and justice may be what we seek.

It is better off to be confused as we seek to understand the thing that is life, is love.

Money and power may try to fill the void inside, and peace and justice may be what we seek, but unless we try to get it high, we ain't gonna be nothing but weak.

Standing on the edge of the precipice looking into the abyss down gazying into the decisions he must face, of what to do or where to go, he does not know.

Taking a step back, breathing a sigh, starting again, wanting to meet the Creator, to figure out the questions, to ask why, he must stand before the bottomless crater.

The answers seem far away, much too far to see unless the help we seek comes from above, it is better off to be confused as we seek to understand the thing that is life, is love.

To climb the highest mountain, to overcome the lost, we must find out that it was only but killed, running from hide to hide, traveling ghosts, to the soul of holy which needs be filled.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

1  friend of Tm's—

Richard Riley

One fact becomes alarmingly clear as one drives around any major American city, particularly in the Midwest: U.S. industry is in decline.

The reasons for this collapse are many, but one common thread unifies them all: a laissez-faire approach to economics and trade, while our competitors take a much more aggressive, zero-sum view and also from the public's negative opinion of U.S. manufacturing. The trade policy has been extremely misguided in the postwar era, favoring imports over exports and clinging to a free market ideal long after they've been surpassed.

The world's post-war economic expansion was due not so much to smaller government and free trade, but due to the fact that the US that offered a market for a flood of foreign goods.

Our competitors, particularly in Japan, have a very different concept of what the theories of economics found in our country.

Japanese practices neo-mercantilism and uses cartels, dumping, and complex web of barriers to shield itself from any conceivable competition. There are a multitude of other government activities to advance its economic conquests. It has been so effective that the "Little Tigers" such as Taiwan, Hong Kong, and South Korea are following Japan's lead. Europe, while not as extreme as Japan, has seen cartels, quota systems and trade regulations and continues to heavily support its own industries.

Airbus, a completely subsidized European competitor, is challenging Boeing for leadership in the last dominant American industry. As expected, American companies must face domestic rivals as well as foreigners, who are often backed up by their own government. The United States government is neutral at best.

Our trade regulation is not even enforced. When the Customs Service convicted Japan of dumping TV sets in the mid-70's, the TV sets actually collected were only a fraction of what they should have been. Boeing, for example, would not enforce the Super 301 clause of the Trade Act, which states that we save American machine-tool makers against a heavily subsidized Japanese cartel. When Smith-Correo closed its last plant, Boeing asked what did it cite? "Predatory Japanese pricing and a lack of encouragement of our domestic companies."

Now Bush is proposing NAFTA which could be the death knell of U.S. manufacturing.

The public continues to make a complete misconception of U.S. industry as some kind of evil entity out to pollute the world and shaft consumers. They've almost accomplished the flood of foreign goods we are currently awash in and seem indifferent to the present struggle for survival that our manufacturers face.

They also want our industries to be only encouraged to improve an immense amount of regulations and controls that our competitors just don't have to worry about. The public stereotypes are at least 15 years out of date, and even foreign lawyers, lobbyists, and other agents of influence, especially from Japan, have done a good job of preserving these myths.

Also, industry is not stressed in schools as professions such as law, medicine and finance are pushed. A turning away from manufacturing has also been noted as a reason for the decline of the British empire.

Foreign policy alone is not obviously not a solution as they are trying new approaches and to circumvent trade restrictions. Their products are still being classified as "American" they really are not.

Most importantly, according to the National Association of Manufacturers, foreign enterprises actually led to a net elimination of at least 200,000 U.S. jobs primarily because these factories import more than twice as much of their components as their domestic counterparts.

In short, the "transplants" can really only benefit to the greater good of the American people and government must acknowledge that industry is the key to our economy and strive to strengthen it.

We cannot be a world power on a services economy mainly because you cannot export services.

We need a public which understands the critical role of industry in maintaining living standards and in providing jobs.

We must make America a friendly place to manufacture once again. Everyone's shopping need must become "Buy American." Not just because we have an absolute advantage to do so, but because if we do not support our industries, no one else will.

Lastly, I truly abhor the way "rust Belt" is thrown around, but then the more accurate description "Dumped and Regulated to Death Belt" isn't as catchy.

"There's a lot of bullshit in the music business," says Joe Bregande, lead singer and songwriter for Sea of Words, which is now touring the Midwest. "If you're in it to make it, you might as well give up.

Unlike other groups that have already "made it," Sea Of Words does not have an Artist and Repertoire (A&R) supporter pushing their posters, sending their tapes and requesting radio stations to play their music. According to Bregande, bands who are represented "can concentrate on what they should be concentrating on: writing and recording." But A&R people are hard to get. They can receive up to 1000 tapes a day, leaving only enough time for them to listen to each tape for an average of 10 seconds before fast-forwarding to the chorus. "That's shit," says Bregande. "If they listen to the third song they probably like you already." Also, "you have to be real careful they're not going to rip you off," says the singer/songwriter.

Bregande remarks about the number of available management groups. "It's incredible, it seems overwhelming. At the same time, I take some consolation in how many shitty bands have contracts. The figures, I try not to believe them or be fooled." According to Bregande, a great deal of making in the business relies on luck. "You gotta be real lucky and work your ass off," he says. "Say for some weird reason—some unknown reason—some A&R person walks into Club 23, you're the Clue because he's passing through town or something. I don't know, he came from a football game or something. And you're playing. You could be successful.

Sea of Words plays frequently at Club 23 in South Bend where Bregande first heard guitarist Marc Conklin's former ND band. The Five O'Clock Shots three years ago. Bregande invited the group to record in New York where he was getting his degree in sound recording, and told Conklin, "If you guys break up and still wanna play music, give me a call.

Conklin returned the call two years later, marking the beginning of Sea of Words. Since then, Bregande's game plan for Sea of Words was to persevere. "You have to keep going," he says. "If you think you're just stuff, and you've re-evaluated your stuff, then you just have to keep going or give up. If you love it, you keep going no matter how shitty the business is.

Bregande says Sea of Words plans to last "until someone decides—or we all decide—we're not gonna make a living from it, which pretty much just means paying the rent. Right now, Bregande says, "I really wanna get going." He wants to get to Milwaukee where there are a lot of clubs, a lot of venues, and a lot of bands. "This sucks. Here I am, pretty much out of money, hanging around, and I haven't eaten today.

Although the band did not intend to be in South Bend this long, Bregande expects Sea of Words to be here until the spring. The band seems content gaining a local following, thanks to Club 23, which has been giving them good nights and helping them target the music scene. "We're lucky that way," says Bregande. "I love playing at Club 23.

Sea of Words is scheduled to play at Club 23 Halloween night, supported by another band. The Sister Chain. In addition, Sea of Words is scheduled to play in Chicago's Lincoln Top Room tonight. A tape of six of the group's originals is also for sale.

Leyland tabbed as NL Manager of the Year

NEW YORK (AP) — Jim Leyland, who guided the Pittsburgh Pirates to their third straight National League East title this season, was named NL Manager of the Year on Wednesday.

Leyland was voted first on 20 of 24 ballots and received 109 points overall to beat rookie manager Felipe Alou of the Montreal Expos, who took over in May for Tom Candiotti, was named on three first-place ballots and received 65 points. The other first-place vote went to Atlanta's Bobby Cox, who finished third with 29 points.

It was the second time in the three years that Leyland has been named Manager of the Year in voting by the Baseball Writers Association of America.

"This is real pleasing to me," Leyland said at a news conference in Pittsburgh. "Nobody wants to sound like they're boasting, but I think it was my year. We had some unorthodox things, and everything happened to work out."

The Pirates finished 96-66 and beat the Expos by nine games. It was a surprising success for Pittsburgh after losing outfielder Bobby Bonilla to free agency and trading pitcher John Smiley just before the start of the season for financial reasons.

Leyland's regular-season success, however, was once again spoiled in the playoffs as the Pirates lost to the NL West champion for the third straight year. This time was particularly painful as Atlanta rallied for three runs in the bottom of the ninth inning of Game 7 to keep Leyland and the Pirates out of the World Series again.

"A lot of people think that (Game 7) is going to be lasting and won't go away, but 1992 is going to be a good memory for me," Leyland said. "I'm sad for our community and sad for this organization, but 1992 was a great year for the Pittsburgh Pirates. We won 96 games — 99 if you count the playoffs — we came back from 3-1 down in the playoffs and we were ahead 2-0 in the ninth inning of Game 7. How could that be a bad year?"

San Francisco group ups offer for Giants

NEW YORK (AP) — The group trying to keep the Giants in San Francisco today increased their offer to $100 million from $95 million.

The NL said it had received the offer from a group headed by Safeway Inc. chairman Peter Magowan. The league said it would continue to study the proposal alongside the $115 million bid from a Florida group headed by Vincent J. Naimoli.

Giants owner Bob Lurie announced Aug. 7 that he had agreed in principal to sell the team to Naimoli, who would move the Giants to the Florida Suncoast Dome in St. Petersburg. However, NL president Bill White said in September that he would accept a Bay Area offer and submit it to owners for consideration alongside the Tampa Bay bid.

"We are proud to deliver this amended, strengthened offer to National League president Bill White," Magowan said in a joint statement with Walter Shorenstein, a limited partner in his group. "The offer comes from a dedicated local group with outstanding credentials. We believe we have been responsive to baseball's expressed concerns and we look forward to their prompt decision." Baseball's ownership committee and executive council will debate the proposal and make a recommendation to owners. Although no major league meeting has been called, owners are leaning toward a Nov. 10 session in the Phoenix area. Magowan's group submitted its first proposal on Oct. 12 during a meeting in New York.

Nixon happy to be part of Braves' celebration

ATLANTA (AP) — For Otis Nixon, it was the greatest year.

For some 26,254 Atlanta Braves fans who showed up to honor the two-time National League champions Tuesday at Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium, it, too, was great.

But it was also very different from a year ago when 750,000 fans swarmed through downtown Atlanta to pay tribute to the Braves with a two-hour ticker tape parade after the home team captured its first NL title in 25 years.

In 1991, the Braves scored from last place to the World Series, only to lose to the Minnesota Twins in seven games. This year the Toronto Blue Jays beat the Braves in six games.

"It was nothing like last year, but that was the first time," said Braves second baseman Mark Lemke after the one-hour "Grand Slam Salute" at the 50,000-seat stadium under a cloudy sky and temperature in the 70s. "But this was nice.

"It was more than nice for Nixon, who was suspended for drug use in September last year and missed the NL playoffs and World Series, spending his time in a rehabilitation center rather than with his teammates.

"It's just a great feeling standing here today. It's hard for me to put into words what this means," said Nixon. "I look back at the playoffs and World Series and that was a great feeling. I'm here today, I have those same feelings."

Last October, fans broke through police lines to the players riding in convertibles along the 12-block parade route through downtown Atlanta. Several store windows were broken and police were criticized for a lack of crowd-control.

Tuesday, the crowd sat in assigned seats and chanted and chatted as the players walked on a red carpet that stretched from the Braves' first base dugout to just beyond second base where a podium was set up.

City officials, possibly fearing tear gas and violence, decided to keep the celebration controlled this time. Tickets were sold for $9 and parking also was $1.

"There were too many people in a short span of real estate the last time. There wasn't enough room, but it was a dynamite parade," said Braves manager Bobby Cox.

"But this was a good idea," he said. "I think it's great. It shows how much the fans appreciate our players.

"It was wilder last year, but it was the first time we had won the pennant," said Tom Hart, an Atlanta mortgagor who took the afternoon off to attend. "This one is more organized, but it's still great. There's just as much enthusiasm as a year ago.

"This was more of an appreciation for a great team in Atlanta. I'm proud of them," said Don Hodges of Duluth, a printer who took the day off.

It was a repeat of last year, decided to go with a one-hour ceremony with a team of four Army parachutists from Fort Benning dropping in short right field. After several local high school bands marched and Tom Braxton sang the National Anthem, a five-minute video of the Braves' season was shown, bringing the roaring crowd to its feet.

Then it was time to introduce the coaching staff and players.

Francisco Cabrera, who won NL playoffs against Pittsburgh with a ninth-inning home run in Game 7 of the NL Division Series, had arrived with the Braves into the World Series, received one of the lowest ovations from the crowd.

Mayor Maynard Jackson presented the Braves with a proclamation and Fulton County commissioner Michael Lomax gave the team a glass sculpture by Georgia artist Mordecai Etchison as the crowd chanted, "Sld, Sld, Sld." The Braves also introduced six other players barely sliding home safely with the winning run after Cabrera's hit.

Bream, however, was a no-show. He had already left for his home in Pennsylvania. He was one of seven absent Braves. The others were Rafael Belliard, Damon Berryhill, Javier Lopez, David Nied, Jeff Heaver and Deion Sanders.

General manager John Schuerholz, Cox, third baseman Terry Pendleton and pitcher Tom Glavine spoke briefly to the crowd.

"We almost did it in 1991. We almost did it in 1992, and I pledge to you today we will not quit until we get the home run in 1993," Cox told the screaming crowd.

McKay, MacLean help Devils sink Whalers

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) -- Randy McKay scored 48 seconds into overtime and John MacLean scored his first two goals since the 1990-91 season as the New Jersey Devils beat the Hartford Whalers 4-3 on Wednesday.

Scott Stevens passed just to the right of the net to McKay, who skated out, wheeled around and fired a wrist shot past Frank Piatangelo.

Bill Guerin got the other Devils' score, his first regular season goal. Steve Konroyd, Nick Kypros and Patrick Poulin scored for the Whalers, who squandered a 40-save effort by Piatangelo.

The Devils appeared to have the game well in hand when they jumped to a 2-0 lead in the first period as they thoroughly outplayed the Whalers. But Hartford, which was 2-3-2-4 last season when falling two goals behind, tied the score 2-2 in the second period.

MacLean, who scored 40 goals this season, scored in the first period on a knee injury, gave the Devils the 3-2 lead a minute into the third period.

Poulin tied the score for the Whalers, picking up the rebound of Robert Petrovicky's wrist shot and flipping a backhander past Craig Billington.

Although it was one of the few Whalers home games not televised locally, only 8,200 fans attended -- the sixth-smallest crowd in Hartford history. The Whalers are averaging only 9,360 fans a game, down 1,609 a game through the first five games of the season.

MacLean, playing in his 556th game to tie Kirk Muller for second on the Devils career list, scored in the first period -- his first goal since March 23, 1991, against Montreal.

The Devils, second in the league on the power play, moved the puck around the Whalers' zone with four quick passes. Bobby Holik, a former Whaler, found Bruce Driver in the slot. Driver partially fanned on the shot, but MacLean spun away from former teammate Eric Weinrich and poked it past Piatangelo.

Guerin intercepted a pass from Weinrich right in front of the net and beat Piatangelo glove side with a wrist shot.

The Whalers cut the lead to 1-1 on Konroyd's goal. Tim Kerr moved the puck around the Clocktower Square (219) 277-1292

MONTREAL -- Brian Bellows scored the winning goal of a 13-game losing streak Wednesday night.

The New Jersey Devils ended a 13-game skid, the longest in the league this season, with David Bruce off for a knee injury, gave the Devils the 3-2 lead a minute into the third period.

Poulin tied the score for the Whalers, picking up the rebound of Robert Petrovicky's wrist shot and flipping a backhander past Craig Billington.

Although it was one of the few Whalers home games not televised locally, only 8,200 fans attended -- the sixth-smallest crowd in Hartford history. The Whalers are averaging only 9,360 fans a game, down 1,609 a game through the first five games of the season.

MacLean, playing in his 556th game to tie Kirk Muller for second on the Devils career list, scored in the first period -- his first goal since March 23, 1991, against Montreal.

The Devils, second in the league on the power play, moved the puck around the Whalers' zone with four quick passes. Bobby Holik, a former Whaler, found Bruce Driver in the slot. Driver partially fanned on the shot, but MacLean spun away from former teammate Eric Weinrich and poked it past Piatangelo.

Guerin intercepted a pass from Weinrich right in front of the net and beat Piatangelo glove side with a wrist shot.

The Whalers cut the lead to 1-1 on Konroyd's goal. Tim Kerr moved the puck around the net to McKay, who skated out, wheeled around and fired a wrist shot past Frank Piatangelo.

Bill Guerin got the other Devils' score, his first regular season goal. Steve Konroyd, Nick Kypros and Patrick Poulin scored for the Whalers, who squandered a 40-save effort by Piatangelo.

The Devils appeared to have the game well in hand when they jumped to a 2-0 lead in the first period as they thoroughly outplayed the Whalers. But Hartford, which was 2-3-2-4 last season when falling two goals behind, tied the score 2-2 in the second period.

Dear Notre Dame / Saint Mary's Community:

This is an exciting time for all of us as the start of the basketball season is just a few weeks away. We are looking forward to continuing where we left off last year and hope all of our fans are too. The surge we made last year was partly due to the increased fan support from all of you. We have been working very hard during the off-season and are anxious to begin a new season.

We have some tough and exciting home season ahead of us and we are certain that you will see some of the best basketball in the nation right here on campus. Defending National Champion Duke, as well as perennial national powers Indiana and Kentucky, will be visiting the JACC this season. We also will be hosting top rivals Evansville, Marquette and Dayton. It certainly will be a season that you will not want to miss.

During the off-season, several changes were made with you, the fan, in mind. First, we were thrilled with the student participation during last year's NIT tournament and have decided to make those seating arrangements permanent. This year, all student seats will be in the east end court near our bench (Sections 13, 14, 15, & 16) starting on the floor in the lower arena and extending up to the bleachers. What is even more exciting is that all student seats, regardless of location, are only $4.00 per game. So, the entire 11 game season can be purchased for just $44.00. Do not forget that this year's student ticket distribution will take place Monday, November 2 through Thursday, November 5 from 9 AM to 6 PM at the JACC Gate 10 Box Office.

We've also made some off-season changes with the Notre Dame/Saint Mary's community in mind. The biggest change comes in the form of the "Fast Break" ticket package. This six-game package offers bleacher seats to six of the premier games this season and includes Indiana, Duke, and Kentucky. This option is available to all Irish basketball fans for only $60.00.

Take a look at the photo included at the bottom of this letter. The photo was taken immediately after the Irish upset #1 ranked North Carolina back in 1987 right here in the Joyce Center. This is what we hope the Joyce Center will look like again this year. While I can't make any promises about wins and losses, I can guarantee you EXCITEMENT, and hope to see all of you in the Joyce Center this season.

Sincerely,

John MacLeod

Flanner, Zahm favored in IH football

By TIMOTHY SEYMOUR

The playoffs have finally arrived for the final eight teams in the interhall football league, as the top four teams of each of the two divisions will play cross-sectional games for the first time this season. A single elimination playoff format will decide which dorm earns the right to call itself number one.

Zahm(4-0) vs. Dillon (2-2)
Zahm, which emerged unbeaten from the Blue Division, enters the playoffs as the top seed from there and will compete against Dillon, the fourth seed from the Gold Division. Zahm proved to be one of the most explosive teams in the regular season, as its offense is stacked with a variety of weapons.

The offensive route is led by quarterback Chris Hammond, a threat to both run and pass. His favorite target is Pete Court, who may be the most dangerous offensive player in the league, capable of breaking off big plays on either pass reception or kick return.

Where Zahm breathed through its schedule, Dillon arrived in the playoffs by a more indirect route, as it was forced to beat Stanford in the last game of the season to make the elite eight. Unlike Zahm, Dillon does not have the firepower to blow opponents out, but rather close games have been the hallmark of their season.

This may be an advantage in the playoffs, as Dillon showed remarkable tenacity in its win over Stanford, coming back in the waning minutes to score a come from behind 8-4 victory.

Flanner (4-0) vs. Carroll(2-2)
Flanner, the number one seed from the Gold Division, plays Carroll, the number four seed of the Blue Division, in an interesting matchup that pugs strength against finesse.

Flanner relies on a power running game and suffocating defense to go through the season unbeaten, as quarterback Tim Kusserow and fullback Mike Thompson led the offense in a concentrated ground attack. The Flanner defense was the key to its success, as it was able to stifle teams as they neared the goal line, preventing good scoring opportunities against itself.

Carroll is the antithesis of this style, using a quick-strike offense to score against its opponents. Carroll is led by the multi-purpose quarterback Jon Oleksyk, who is capable of keeping the ball himself or throwing to experienced wideouts Anthony Laboe and Jack Hay.

Alumni (3-1) vs. Off-Campus (3-1)
Alumni may be the wildcard team of this draw, as it has capitalized on opportunistic chances to win its games. The Alumni offense has taken advantage of big plays all year, as receivers Patrick Bitter, Tyrone Smoak, and Dan Morrison are all capable of long receptions from quarterback Conrad Hansen. The Alumni defense has also made a living off big plays, relying on interceptions to shift the momentum of the game in its favor.

Off-Campus also enters the playoffs on a hot streak, having won three in a row after dropping its first game. OC is led by linebacker/Fullback Tom Pilstick who is capable of turning the tide of a game single-handedly. The offense is led by quarterback Joel Wine and fullback Benny Morrison, who mix a ball control power running game with opportune big plays.

Keenan (3-1) vs. Cavanaugh (4-0)
Keenan, the third seed of the Gold Division, also comes into the playoffs having won its last few games. Running backs Dave Detterline and Brian Murphy are the focus of Keenan’s ball control offense, each capable of breaking free for a long gain, while quarterback Matt Casey can come up with a key completion when the situation mandates it. Keenan’s defense is one of the league’s strongest, anchored by Rich Toohey.

Cavanaugh, the second seed of the Blue Division because of Zahm’s better point total, is the third of the unbeaten teams in the playoffs. Cavanaugh enters with a lot of momentum, having ended the season with a huge victory over Carroll. Nick Prezeravel is the backfield workhorse of the offense, while the defense routinely kept the team in the game with key goal line stands.

Alumni wins second straight IH soccer crown, 2-0

By KEVIN JANIcki

In the wake of some tournament controversy, the men's intercollegiate soccer championship game was played yesterday at Stepan. Alumni took home its second straight championship by defeating Carroll 2-0.

Carroll appeared in the championship game only after semifinal winner Zahm was declared ineligible by a RecSport protest board before full break for using ineligible players. But with the controversy behind them, Alumni and Carroll did battle in an extremely physical game.

"This was definitely one of the more physical games of the season," remarked Carroll captain Tony Yang.

Despite being shutout 6-1 in the first half, Carroll denied excellent offensive play by Alumni's Greg Borkowski and Mark O'Neil thanks mainly to several remarkable saves by goalkeeper Mark Vives. And fifteen minutes into the game, Carroll's goal was called back when one referee cited an obstruction of Alumni's Mike Rigley. After the scoreless first half, Alumni was finally able to capitalize on two attacks in the second half.

Eighteen minutes into the second half of play, Borkowski put a hard right-footed shot into the upper left corner of the net. And five minutes later, senior midfielder Eric Horvath volleyed a shot off of the midfielder and into the net to seal the victory for Alumni.

Alumni finished the season unscorched upon, moving confidently into the IH regular season and through the playoffs.

"Experience is a big part of it," remarked team captain Volker Blankenstein, "we bring a lot of senior leadership." Specifically, Blankenstein emphasized the great play of seniors Tony Symonds and Jim Kuser on defense and senior midfielders Bill Farahbaugh and Bill Blum.

Alumni co-captains Blankenstein and Horvath also noted the importance of the Alumni students who supported the team all year long. In an effort to create a home field atmosphere for themselves, Alumni sponsored a pre-game cookout for Alumni fans.

But Carroll more than held their own in the spectator department. A spirited group took well to Alumnae Field and the football team turned out to lend support to the talented Carroll squad.

But it was not to be for Carroll this year as team captain Yang noted,"Alumni is an excellent team. They played a great game.

I hope to shoot more threes and have a better percentage from there," McClelland commented.

This philosophy is fine with Boyer, who will serve as captain against Carl Cozen and Billy Taylor.

"I love the idea," Boyer said with a smile, "I worked on my shot over the summer, and I concentrated on the three. Not only the stationary shot, but off the catch and off the dribble as well.

Up front the Irish return their lone senior starter in Taylor, who will team with Monty Williams and Joe Ross in the projected lineup.

Williams and Ross will have to step up in the graduated LaPomone Ellis and Keith Tower.

"We are a small team compared to last year," McClelland said. "I'm concerned with our ability to keep people off the boards. We can't run without the ball. We need to do a good job on our defensive rebounds.

Williams (6'7", 207) weighs thirty pounds less than Ellis was last year, but showed a lot of potential as a freshman in 1989-90 when he averaged 7.7 points and 3.7 rebounds per game.

"I'm excited about Monty, and he is going to bring leadership to the team," McClelland said. "My concern is that after two years away from competition, he will have trouble getting into a rhythm of the game."

"I know how he wants to react, but I don't know how he will adjust," Ross, along with twin brother Jon, was outsuscelled a lot last season, but

After losing two of their last three games, the Notre Dame men's soccer team didn't practice on Tuesday.

Instead, they had a two-hour team meeting to discuss how to regroup before the Midwestern Conference tournament, which begins next week in Indianapolis.

Demoralizing losses to Vanderbilt and Loyola left the team searching for answers as they head into the final stretch of the regular season, and they may have found some of those answers in Tuesday's meeting.

"We talked about the things we need to do as a team to avoid the little breakdowns that cost us games," senior Kevin Pendergast said. "But we're practicing hard, but we have to combine that intensity with more consistency on the field."

The Bulldogs had a chance to tie the Big Ten conference game of the season.

They played a great game.
