House passes NAFTA proposal

Associated Press

The House rendered its verdict after a day-long debate that reflected high-minded dis- agreements over America's role in the world economy and fairness. Scores of labor-backed Democrats abandoned their president to assure passage. The 218 needed to approve the presidential phone calls with Canadian leaders came from key lawmakers concerned about the pact's impact on a variety of domestic industries.

A cheer went up in the chamber when the vote count passed the needed to approve the pact. Opponents stood in clumps, shaking their heads and muttering at the result. The House was packed with lawmakers, the spectators' gallery that rings the chamber was filled.

"A vote for NAFTA is in the great tradition of our party," said House GOP Leader Bob Michel of Illinois who said in a ringing speech of support. "So let it be said on this crucial vote tonight, that we Republicans did not sacrifice our jobs or tomorrow to the fears of today."

Democratic Leader Richard Gephardt summed up for the opponents, who feel the pact will throw thousands of Americans out of work. "Deficient and flawed," he said of NAFTA. "We cannot and must not expose our workers and our corporations to unfair competition."

The accord would create a continental free-trade zone by gradually eliminating tariffs over 15 years. All industries would be affected, from fruits and vegetables to banking and automobiles.

Administration officials and some lawmakers also said a favor- able vote would strengthen Clinton's hand as he departs for Seattle on Thursday — and would lead to freer trade with Europe and all of South America, as well.

For his part, Clinton said he hoped he and Congress could build on the bipartisan cooperation that carried NAFTA to passage. He also reached out to aieme to the administration's choice any- way. "They have my respect," he said.

A total of 245 lawmakers spoke in 13 hours of debate — more than half the House. Opponents vented their anger over concessions the administration made to line up votes. "If this is such a good deal why did we almost have to give the portico away on the White House to get it?" asked Rep. Butler Derrick, D-Ga.

Anton Masin remembered as a lover of literature and of reading

By JOHN LUCAS

Professor Anton Masin loved watching students learn. In his 20 years at Notre Dame, Masin's experiences with the Freshman Writing Program inspired him to become a teacher of Humanities. In the fall of 1993, Masin led the seminar on "The Crucible," his favorite American play. Masin's high spirits and love for literature were contagious, and his students adored him.

More than friends and respected by students and colleagues, "Anton was that kind of teacher," said Father Richard Jenke, rector of Sacred Heart Basilica and e e s p o n d e n t o f y e s t e r d a y 's memorial mass. "He was a lover of literature, languages, philosophy and theology," said Edward Kline, director of the Freshman Writing Program. "He knew a lot about subjects other than literature, but Anton was gifted because he had the ability to put them all together."

A native of Brooklyn, New York, Masin received his Bachelor's Degree from Brooklyn College while also receiving graduate degrees from Pratt Institute and Notre Dame, where he worked in communications and art. "He was a real booker," according to Dennis Moran, a colleague of Anton Masin who died last Sunday after a two year battle with cancer.

Cavanaugh will convert to female residence hall

By SARAH DORAN

Cavanaugh Hall will be converted to a female residence hall, effective fall 1994, to accommodate the University's gender-blind admissions policy, which has resulted in a larger enrollment of women since it went into effect two years ago, the office of student affairs announced last night.

Cavanaugh residence hall was transformed into a female residence hall as a result of the University's gender-blind admissions policy. This decision was made in consultation with students and faculty members, including Thomas, who was a co-ordinator at Cavanaugh.

Champs? We're not worthy

This year's Notre Dame football team has undoubtedly proven that it is the best team to this date, and more importantly, that it is a contender for the national championship. It would be prudent for these players to adjust their goals and make sure they perform up to par when it comes to their normal routines. People wrote papers, but by dinner time Sunday students were back into the middle of an adjacent street and light it up, as an endless display of enthusiasm and passion for our school. The former Tammy Faye Bakker is starting up a help line for despondent people, saying she knows what true misery is like. The ex-wife of imprisoned religious broadcaster Jim Bakker told ABC-TV's "PrimeTime Live" in an interview for broadcast Thursday night that she pities sad people. Married last month to Kansas City lawyer Roe Messner, she said the 900 line will have a new message each day. "I hope that people that are hurting will call in and maybe somebody through my experience help them get up that day, put on makeup, shave their beard and get out and not just stay holed up in the house," she said. During the PTL scandal she cried incessantly, she said. "You didn't even want to show your face again as long as you live," she said. Bakker was convicted in 1989 of cheating PTL followers of more than $150 million. The scandal came up when Houck's order Wednesday, lawyers for Faulkner wanted to get my education from, "she told reporters in Spartanburg while wearing a navy blue Citadel sweater. Court upholds woman in cadet classes

A woman may attend classes with cadets at The Citadel while her lawsuit challenging the military college's all-male admissions policy is heard, an appeals court ruled Wednesday. Shannon Faulkner's lawsuit says The Citadel's all-male corps is unconstitutional. She would be the first woman to attend day classes with cadets in The Citadel's 151-year history. Women are allowed in night classes, but not in the military division, where Faulkner wants to go.

Senate votes to ban assault weapons

LARRY MARGASAK

WASHINGTON

The Senate today approved a ban on 19 types of military-style assault weapons as it inch ed toward a final vote on a $22 billion anti-crime bill. The vote was 56-43 for the amendment by Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., which was carefully crafted to overcome some of the opposition from gun control opponents. It would protect 650 named guns used by hunters and sportsmen.

Before adopting the ban, the Senate killed a proposal by Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., to speed and limit appeals by state death row inmates who use the federal courts. The vote was 65-34 to table the measure.

Both liberal and conservative senators differed with Specter's language, although there was widespread support for limiting the so-called habeas corpus appeals. No further action was expected this year on the issue, which was separated from the larger crime bill so it wouldn't jeopardize the legislation.

The Senate was considering the crime-fighting bill just two days after a Washington Post-ABC News poll focused on the fear of crime — with 21 percent of respondents identifying it as the nation's most important problem, well ahead of unemployment and health care.

The entire crime bill could receive a final vote today and head for a conference with the House — which has approved a scaled-down version.

The Senate measure's key component would authorize $8.9 billion to hire 100,000 new police officers over five years. New prisons would be built. Financing would come from reductions in federal employment during 1994-98. The bill would expand the death penalty to cover nearly 50 offenses including murder of a law enforcement officer, drive-by shootings and carjackings in which a victim is killed.

Military recruiting fewer high school graduates

By SUSANNE SCHAFER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON

Fewer of the military's recruits were high school graduates last fiscal year, according to Pentagon figures showing a decline in the quality of the men and women joining the services.

Defense Secretary Les Aspin, however, said the numbers had improved over the past several months and were "very, very strong" in comparison to most years.

Overall, 95 percent of the 206,927 new recruits brought in during fiscal year 1993 were high school graduates, compared with 99 percent one year earlier, according to the figures released Wednesday. The Pentagon reported that all four military services met or exceeded their goals for signing up as many recruits as they needed during the year.

The annual report on recruiting quality is seen by military analysts as a crucial indicator for the ability of the military services to entice high-quality men and women into a military force that is shrinking and under severe budget constraints.

"They asked me to write this ad. They didn't tell me what to say."

My name is Scott Schuster. My employer, Ernst & Young, asked me to help with a recruitment ad. I guess it made sense. I was just finishing my first year here. And, having been fairly heavily recruited myself, I was familiar with the situation.

Yes, I too had heard the words of romance. The flattery. The promises. In short, the usual lines from the usual big firms. And, like you, I wondered what, if anything, it all meant. Was it real? Were these people sincere? So, in the interest of heightened reality, I thought I'd comment on life in a large firm one year later, at least as I've experienced it at Ernst & Young.

I found that while I was prepared for a lot of things, one that I certainly didn't expect was the sense of common purpose and teamwork here. Some of you may not find this such a big deal, at least right now. But for me, the camaraderie has made this year immensely productive, and enjoyable. The philosophy at E&Y is that, first and foremost, our goal is problem solving and helping our clients. In practice, this means teamwork with a lot of very seasoned veterans. The result: I've learned more about public accounting, tax and consulting in one year than I thought was humanly possible. The opportunity to intern yourself to virtually any practice group in the firm is real. I've already taken advantage of it and I plan to do more of it. It's a tremendous way to gain entirely new areas of knowledge and experience before I decide which area I want to settle into.

I also get the sense that while the firm is incredibly important to everyone, it isn't the only thing in their lives.

So, while I can't claim Ernst & Young is right for everyone, it was a very good choice for me.

And, of course, if the idea of a firm that would let a guy like me write my own ad sounds out of the ordinary, Ernst & Young is definitely for you. Who knows? Next year, you might be the one writing this ad.

Clinton recently denounced labor for using "roughshod, muscle-bound tactics" by threatening to withhold support for the pact in the Democratic voting for the accord.

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland fired back, saying Clinton was "the man who signs his name on that piece of legislation as its leader" while the Democratic party agreed by to appeal Republican suggestions that Democrats wouldn't make NAFTA a 1994 campaign issue.

Joining the opponents was Ronald Perot, who quickly approved of the agreement could lead to an end of political party. The tensions were evident as the vote neared.

Angered by a suggestion from Rep. Gerald Solomon that White House deal making secured his support, Rep. Mel Reynolds of Kansas challenged his fellow "Republican: You, Sir, have fired a shotgun of fear at me and I resent it."

"This is a painful vote," said Rep. Richard Obenshain, an Illinois Democrat who said he had to "respectfully disagree" with many of Clinton's Democratic allies. NAFTA is an opportunity, not a political panac-omic. We have the most productive workers in the world," he said.

Angered by attacks on Mexico's human rights record, Rep. Kika de la Garza, D-Texas, denounced "the way the people of Mexico have been depicted, the way the government of Mexico has been insulted. That really shouldn't be the issue."

Opponents seemed to hold the upper hand as the NAFTA struggle until the final few days. By then, persistent efforts to appease Clinton on key points over local issues began to pay off, resulting in a rush of support for the pact.

The agreement was designed to protect speccific industries from Mexican goods — allowed into the United States in return for a rush of American goods to the Mexican marketplace.

Rep. E. Clay Shav, R-Fla., announced an "adoption" of the pact after Mexico pledged it would be a model for economic development and not a sign of abdication and raping a young girl in southern California.

A REVISIONIST VIEW OF THE U.S. HOLOCAUST MEMORIAL MUSEUM

By Bradley R. Smith

After ten years in the planning, 165 million in start-up costs and a government guarantee of 110 million more in ten subsidies, the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum, which is in Washington, D.C., will open its doors in late spring. Will it deliver on its promise of presenting a "true" account of the Holocaust and not a "white-washed" one? How can the Museum present "the facts" and not what are called "revisionist" interpretations? This fall, the U.S. National HOLOCAUST MEMORIAL MUSEUM will be housed in the United States Capitol. Appellate Court rules evidence was withheld

By JOHN NOLAN	Associated Press

CINCINNATI - The government withheld evidence that could have helped John Demjanjuk fight extradition to Israel, an appeals court ruled today in a decision that bolstered his fight to regain his U.S. citizenship.

The 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals overturned its own order authorizing Demjanjuk's extradition to Israel. In a measure overturning the order was tainted because of procedural misconduct that amounted to fraud.

Government lawyers "acted with reckless disregard for the truth" in arguing that Demjanjuk was the guard "Ivan the Terrible" at the Treblinka death camp in Nazi-occupied Poland.

Today's ruling clears the way for Demjanjuk to fight a 1981 ruling by U.S. District Judge Frank Battisti in Cleveland that stripped him of his U.S. citizenship.

Attorney General Janet Reno said today she couldn't comment on the decision until the case is read in the court. Defense spokesman John Russell said the government remained convinced that Demjanjuk committed war crimes during World War II and would seek to depose him.

"The department is reviewing its legal options," she added, "and intends, as previously stated, to effect Demjanjuk's prompt removal from the United States as soon as his legal status is resolved." Russell said.

The retired Cleveland auto worker returned to the United States in September after the highest Supreme Court overturned his 1988 conviction and death sentence based on evidence that some, one else was "Ivan the Terrible." He had been spent more than seven years in an Israeli prison.

"Justice has been done and God bless America," said Ed Nishnic of Demjanjuk's son-in-law and family spokesman.

Negotiators agree to reform army
By JOHN DANISZEWSKI

JOHANNESBURG - The government and African National Congress agreed today on the final outstanding issues of their two-year talks, clearing the way for F.W. de Klerk and Nelson Mandela to sign a historic pact creating a color-blind South Africa.

Other black and white groups at talks were considering the latest ANC-government agreements, with all the 21 political parties expected to approve them tonight.

The signing ceremony, originally scheduled for this morning, was repeatedly delayed as negotiators struggled to wrap up work on an interim constitution that will treat blacks and whites equally for the first time since Dutch merchants arrived in 1652.

Talks had progressed rapidly overnight after a meeting in Pretoria between de Klerk, now likely a lame-duck president, and ANC leader Mandela, the former anti-apartheid political prisoner expected to take the country's helm after the first multiracial election April 27.

The two sides also agreed a final constitution would have to be approved by 60 percent of the lawmakers chosen in the April elections.

The package involved an interim constitution and bill of rights, an electoral law, and legislation establishing independent broadcasting authorities, a 400-member national assembly, a 90-member senate, nine regions with their own legislatures and a multiparty Cabinet headed by a president and at least one vice president.

After its approval by the multiparty negotiators, it will be sent to the last session of the all-white parliament, which sits Monday, for its rubber stamp. Approval is certain.

Issues approved overnight included a plan to reform the army by integrating it with elements of black anti-apartheid forces, and setting out a two-tier police system, with police officers to be recruited from regional government in addition to the national police.

The council also approved a resolution to reincorporate into South Africa four so-called "third-party" black homelands, created in apartheid's vain attempt to permanently separate blacks and whites.

Another Gift of Mara Fox

The recent, sudden death of Mara Fox, first year student from Lyons Hall, drives many thoughts into our heads and hearts. People think about Mara's parents and sisters and friends, left without her now, and share in their awful pain. People remember a lively young woman who was never turned upon by her own fragile nature. People get mad at the driver of the runaway car, and then remember that forgiveness is the truest test of Christian spirit.

I went with the women of Lyons Hall who flew to Virginia last Monday for the Funeral Mass there. We met Mara's parents and two sisters, and hundreds of her relatives and friends. All were still shocked at the abruptness of their loss. Many had seen her very recently during Break. Everyone said he or she would laugh and talk with Mara Fox again.

When we returned to Notre Dame for the Memorial Mass here, it was much the same thing for those who had known this lively young woman on campus. One of Mara's teachers was deeply moved by the loss; she had eaten lunch with her on Friday, "and now she is gone.""Groups of freshmen swapped silly stories about their two month old friendships, and then sat silently stunned to realize that their stories could go on no further.

In both locations, in Virginia and at Notre Dame, great crowds celebrated the Holy Eucharist in the memory of Jesus and of Mara, and took grace and blessing from their answers in God.

In both locations, in Virginia and at Notre Dame, great crowds celebrated the Holy Eucharist in the memory of Jesus and of Mara, and took grace and blessing from their answers in God.

Along with this re-affirmation, we must also rightly reexamine our lives. One of Mara's sisters begged me to encourage a deeper participation on this campus in such groups as Students Against Drunk Driving. People can do this by being watchful about what we were done tomorrow. "He is one of a lot... She knew how to party... that guy was always moving a little too fast..."

The abruptness of this death, and the harsh emptiness it leaves where love and friendship thrived before, can also call us to some examination of what we one another.

I asked a friend of mine what he thought I should write about this week. He told me that in the midst of all these events, I should encourage people to say "thank you" right now to the ones we love and who have helped us in our lives. With "Thanksgiving" season coming next week, he thought I should encourage students to write home now to their parents and tell them they are loved and remembered with gratitude. With the holiday approaching, he said we should all pray for the courage to speak up and seek healing where we have had bad blood in our homes, to reconcile with old loves taken for granted.

I do so encourage you. The gift of life in Mara Fox, her attitude and her reputation, are like light, bringing new clarity to our own personal callings. Take the time needed now, and over the holiday, and tell people what they need to hear, especially thank you. Mara Fox never let anyone she knew walk by her on the sidewalk without a "Hi!" or "Hey!" or "How are you!" Mara Fox never let anyone walk by her on the sidewalk without a "Hi!" or "Hey!" or "How are you!"

Ninth Israeli soldier killed since signing of agreement

By HAITHAM HAMAD

NAHAL OZ, Gaza Strip
A Palestinian stabbed to death an Israeli soldier today as troop reinforcements were moved into the occupied territories to contain the growing violence.

Twenty-four Palestinians and nine Israelis have been killed since the Israel-PLO accord was signed Sept. 13, and the latest flare-up is threatening to erode support for the peace talks.

The escalation comes at a time when Israeli and Palestinian negotiators report progress in the Cairo talks on implementing the autonomy agreement.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, visiting Canada, said the attacks would not sway Israel from the peace talks. He called on Israelis to be on the alert for further attacks.

"With all of the pain and sorrow, we will continue with the negotiations and we will fight terror," Rabin said on army radio. "This terror wants to kill Israelis and kill the peace process."

The soldier was sipping a soft drink at a refreshment stand in Gaza when the assailant stabbed him in the neck, said Zvi Saar, the stand owner.

The army confirmed the killing of the 30-year-old soldier and said the attacker was captured.

The Nahal Oz junction is a main Gaza entry point for both the Israeli military and Arab day laborers, with mingling in front of the snack shop owned by a nearby kibutz a common occurrence.

The philosophy department at Notre Dame is nationally ranked and world class.

Among other things, it has, over the years, been noted for its contributions to interpreting and teaching the thought of St. Thomas Aquinas.

It is not often clear what courses among the many excellent offerings in philosophy are designed to serve that interest. A brochure providing descriptions of the Spring courses which are Thomistic in inspiration has been mailed to Freshmen and Sophomores.

If you have not received the brochure, ask for one at either the Philosophy Department, 337 O'Shaughnessy or the Jacques Maritain Center, 714 Hesburgh Library.

The Clinton administration is using the Asia-Pacific trade conference to advertise that it has re-focused U.S. foreign policy to make international economics a top priority and Asia as important as Europe.

Senior officialshammered that theme Tuesday as delegations from 15 nations arrived at opening trade opportunities between the United States and the huge Asian market.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher flew into a Boeing airfield to underscore White House commitments to expanding trade.

"I've personally talked to heads of state about buying your airplanes," Christopher told Boeing workers. "I've tried to set an example for supporting American business around the globe."

In Washington, senior administration officials said Tuesday that the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation forum "represents a distinctive imprint of a Clinton presidency to put international economics on the front burner of foreign policy for the first time."

The official, speaking on condition he would not be otherwise identified, said the conference symbolizes "an historic broadening of America's focus" to include Asia as well as Europe, and to create American jobs in the process.

Clinton arrives Thursday on the heels of this weekend's House vote on the North American Free Trade Agreement phasing out trade barriers between the United States, Canada and Mexico. As the vote approached, Clinton appeared to have enough support to win, though.

Success would send Clinton to Seattle with a momentum officials hoped would infuse not only this unusual conference but also a round of global trade talks that must be completed by Dec. 15.

U.S. officials are talking up the huge economic opportunities in booming Asia: a market with $3.8 trillion in infrastructure projects up for bids in the next few years and average economic growth projected at six to seven percent a year for a decade.

Christopher set up an explicit goal Tuesday of doubling U.S. exports to Asia in five years, with jobs that sustain them, in the current year.

"We expect to make progress toward a major trade, a larger investment throughout this Asian-Pacific region, the kind of program that will add growth and create jobs for American workers," Christopher said.

This conference opens today with two days of meetings among foreign and trade ministers. Clinton meets Thursday with the leaders of Canada and Thailand, then on Friday with those of Japan and China.

The conference concludes Saturday with an agreement tented by delegates of all 15 nations, including 11 heads of state.

Deputy U.S. Trade Representative Charles Barshefsky said Tuesday the United States hopes to win approval of a declaration that gives the four-year-old APEC structure a larger voice in policy-making.

Relief driver wounded on the eve of winter aid talks

By DAVID Crary

SARAJEVO

Government soldiers wounded a U.S. relief driver Wednesday, in the latest of several harrowing incidents aimed at assuring the safety of winter aid deliveries to 2.7 million winter-deprived Bosnians.

The shooting is precisely the kind of outrage U.N. relief officials hoped to halt by inviting leaders of Bosnia's warring Croats, Muslims and Serbs to talks Thursday in Geneva.

A U.N. spokesman in Sarajevo, Cmdr. Ihsanul Hossain, said Muslim-led government troops in the Kakanj area, northwest of Sarajevo, shot the driver after the leaders of the aid convoy refused to hand over food and fuel.

He said the Bosnian driver, whose name was not released, was wounded in the back after treatment of a shoulder wound.

It was the latest in a string of attacks on U.N. relief convoys. The killing of a Danish truck driver in the United Nations also blamed on government troops, prompted the suspension of convoys in much of central Bosnia.

All sides in Bosnia's 19-month-old war have harassed relief convoys, in effect using humanitarid aid as a weapon of war.

U.N. officials say the situation is especially dire as another deadly winter approaches with at least 2.7 million people depending on U.N. aid.

Snow already is becoming an obstacle. A U.N. relief official in Sarajevo, Ray Burke, said a convoy trying to reach Sarajevo through Bosnian government-controlled east Herzegovina had to turn back when one truck skidded in snow and blocked the others.

Paris Remodeled over the centuries by royalty seeking immortality by leaving a legacy in stone, the Louvre celebrates its bicentenary as a museum with the completion of a billion dollar overhaul fit for a king.

With the official inauguration of the new Richelieu wing by President Francois Mitterrand on Thursday, the Louvre doubles in size to 645,000 square feet and adds 25 percent more artwork to its galleries.

Journalists get a preview Wednesday of the Richelieu wing, named after the powerful statesman who founded the museum. Named after the powerful Wednesday of the Richelieu wing, named after the powerful statesman who founded the museum.

The first floor of the new Richelieu wing by I.M. Pei combines with a feeling of spaciousness to enhance the biggest antiquite silver spoon to the largest Maximilien tapestry.

"The claustrophobic feeling I used to get is completely gone now," noted Carole Pinto, an American visitor tagging along with the press. "The natural light really gives added beauty to the artwork."

Yet there's no losing sight of the royal palace.

Sweeping, chiseled staircases, vaulted ceilings, high cathedral windows, marble floors and sculpted façades are constant reminders of the Louvre's cultural history that began in 1200 when King Philippe Auguste, fearing invasion from his Norman enemies, built a fortress on the Ile de la Cité.

Two centuries later and twice embattled, it housed Charles V's rare manuscripts, priceless jewels and tapestries. Francois I later added paintings by Titian, Raphael and Da Vinci. But it was Napoleon's demand for tribute in art from his far-flung conquests, including the pink Carousel Arch of triumph hauled from Italy, that made the Louvre the wonder it is.

"I came to the Louvre for the first time in 1951," recalled Pei. "But what I saw in those days is not what I see now," noted Carole Pinto, an American visitor tagging along with the press.

An opportunity to do a big favor for those less fortunate

Dear Editor:

This letter presents an opportunity to do a huge favor for those less fortunate. I have just returned home from witnessing Notre Dame's wonderful victory over Florida State. On the plane home, I read Mike Colman's column in the Chicago Tribune which included the following: "Our mystery hero is about faith and belief," said defensive lineman Bryan Young. "It starts with believing in the Lady of Victory's intercession." Everyone at Notre Dame should be ashamed. I am sure the Lady is.

Rules are snowballing out of control

While the safety of Notre Dame students, as well as of the various campus buildings, should be a foremost concern, the administration has failed to distinguish between fun and serious danger. We are not promoting the occurrence of a snowball fight or any other activities that may potentially cause bodily harm or property damage. Rather, we are describing an alarming trend of increased University control over an already lacking student life. The University needs to adopt a more flexible approach toward administering to the needs of the Student Body where the spirit and tradition of Notre Dame are maintained and not stifled.

Australian students in New York City now have a new home. The Australian Students Association (ASA) held its annual meeting last week to discuss the organization's growth and goals for the upcoming academic year.

The ASA's new headquarters, located in the heart of Manhattan, will serve as a hub for Australian students in the city. The organization plans to hold regular events and activities to strengthen the community among its members.

ASA President Emma Jones said, "We are excited to have a new space in the city. It will be a place where students can come together and build a sense of belonging."

The ASA was established in 1989 and currently has over 400 members. The organization aims to provide support and resources for Australian students in New York City.

The new headquarters is located at 35 West 42nd Street, Suite 700. Members are encouraged to visit and get involved in the organization's events and activities.

Let's consider the statement from the article:

"Laws should protect the right of the living to the potential of life."

To evaluate this, we need to break it down into its components and analyze them. Here's a step-by-step approach:

1. Right of the Living: This part of the statement suggests that laws should protect the rights of individuals who are currently alive. This is a fundamental aspect of human rights law, ensuring that individuals are protected from harm and violence.

2. Potential of Life: This part of the statement introduces the concept of potential life. It implies that laws should also protect the potential for life, which is a more abstract and philosophical concept. This includes protection for embryos, fetuses, and other stages of human development.

3. Protection: The statement suggests that laws should protect both the right of the living and the potential of life. This implies a comprehensive approach to human rights law, ensuring that both current and potential lives are protected.

4. Implications: This statement has significant implications for policy-making and legal frameworks. It suggests a broader scope of protection beyond just the established rights of the living, extending to the potential for life.

In conclusion, while the statement "Laws should protect the right of the living to the potential of life" highlights a comprehensive approach to human rights, it also raises important questions about the nature of life, the rights of the living, and the protection of potential life. It invites further discussion and debate on the role of law in promoting and protecting these rights.
DID YOU KNOW? • INFORMATION ABOUT THE HOMELESS

The National Coalition for the Homeless has named a variety of causes of homelessness, including poverty, unemployment, increased housing costs, and reductions in federal and state assistance.

Estimates of the number of homeless persons in the United States range from 600,000 to 3 million. The Bush Administration found that in 1992 the number of homeless people residing in shelters and on the streets was 1.7 million, but advocates placed the figure at nearly twice that amount.

One of every four homeless persons in urban areas is a child (under age 18). Approximately 50 percent of those children are under the age of five.

According to the U.S. Conference of Mayors, homelessness continues to grow by 25 percent each year.

A family on welfare receives $284 a month to cover near expenses, including rent, utilities, clothing, and transportation.

It is estimated that 23 percent of the nation's homeless population is made up of U.S. Veterans.

Homelessness is not only a big city problem. Studies show that rural homelessness in America is rising at a rate of approximately 25 percent per year.

In Atlanta, Georgia, the demand for shelter for homeless persons increased by 70 percent from 1991 to 1992. Similar data were reported in over 13 other states.

The largest proportion of the sheltered homeless population is unaccompanied men (45 percent), followed by unaccompanied women (15 percent) and families (40 percent).

Nanni offers seminar on homeless next semester

By BILL ALBERTINI

"The typical thing that I say about the class is that I think that it portrays homeless persons in a completely different light. It's not seeing them as the victim, as the poor who are in need of our help, but here they are, the teachers," says Lou Nanni, executive director of the Center for the Homeless, and instructor of the Seminar on Homelessness being taught this semester at Notre Dame.

For the twenty-two Notre Dame graduate and undergraduate students enrolled in this course, one day a week is spent in class discussions centered around readings about the homeless problem. However, every Thursday means a visit to the Center for the Homeless, for sessions taught by present and former guests of the Center, different members of the many homeless sub-populations, and those who work on the front lines of the battle against homelessness.

Most students feel that the trips to the center are the highlights of the class. Kjirsten Hanson, a senior Psychology major, said it is good "just being exposed to a whole bunch of different groups." This includes all of the different homeless or marginalized individuals, including those dealing with mental illness and addictions.

It is a real benefit to be exposed to other populations," Hanson said. "Definitely sharing with the people at the center is the best part of the class for senior Accounting major Jim McGuire. It gives him a much better understanding of the homeless problem.

"I guess I didn't know how the average homeless person actually lived," he stated. "I kind of knew about this general population," but did not really understand the homeless problem in terms of an individual person," continued McGuire. After a semester, he said, "I think I have a better understanding of what people go through and how they try to make it through life day to day."

Many of the students in the course had some sort of previous experience with service work or homelessness. Hanson decided to take the class "because I did a summer service project and I was interested in social concerns. I decided to try and get a new feel for homelessness," Phyllis Barber, a senior Accounting major, said she got involved in the course because she wanted something more than what her previous volunteer experience had given. "I've been doing a lot of other volunteer programs like Appalachia and Urban Plunge, and I really wanted to do something on a longer-term basis," said Barber. "I just wanted to learn more about homelessness, something different from the stereotypes. I had seen a lot of homeless over Urban Plunge and a lot of times I didn't like what I saw and didn't like how they were treated. I wanted to find out more about how I could change that."

Lou Nanni has another perspective. "I think that the diversity in the class has been really exciting. The people from vastly different majors and also ethnic and cultural backgrounds have been great. I've enjoyed that interaction," he stated, referring to the fact that the class includes students from majors such as Business, Psychology, English, Sociology, and Architecture, as well as five international students in the graduate program in Peace Studies.

One of those students is his Nusair, a social worker from Nazareth in Israel/Palestine. According to Nusair, her background as a social worker made it important "to get to know the problems of society."

For her, the highlight of the class was the connection developed between the theories on homelessness which the class read and discussed, and the practical implementation of those theories seen at the Center for the Homeless.

"We could always compare what succeeded and what didn't," she said. "I think if there was one thing I wanted everybody to take away from the course it is that there is something to be learned from everybody, especially those who are most dispossessed and disenfranchised in our society," said Nanni in explaining his idea of the course's motives. "The ones who have the least vested in this world are the ones who are often able to reveal the truth in the most profound ways."

Many students highly recommend the class, if it is offered again. For senior Jean Einloth, the class "was a learning experience in far more than factual knowledge. I think you grow in your compassion to the issue and your ability to change it," she said.

Barber said, "I recommend it for people, but especially those not very informed about different issues about social concerns, and who do not do a lot of volunteer work," she said. "It puts you in a different mindset, I think it's important for everyone. However, Nanni is not sure the class will be taught again. "I'm not sure there is interest here at Notre Dame to do it again," he said.

For Einloth, the class gave an invaluable lesson. Everyone should know that becoming homeless can happen to anybody. She remarked, "We need to get over stereotype homeless individuals or think that they choose that way of life and that therefore they're not worthy of any of our attention."
Grant provides service opportunities for students

Thanks to funds provided by a grant from the Corporation for Community Change, the Service, Notre Dame's Center for Social Concerns (CSC), along with other agencies in the area, has launched a pilot program in one of its on-campus service projects: to enable student volunteers to deepen their understanding of homelessness and to enable more faculty to incorporate service-learning into their teaching.

The grant is part of the Indiana Campus Compact, a consortium of universities that makes available to the CSC and the Center for the Homeless through the grant.

Bucscano said, "We will focus our efforts on the development of volunteer programs and incorporating service-learning into courses at Notre Dame."

promote community service, according to Drew Bucscano, Service Center Coordinator for the CSC and the Center for the Homeless. Notre Dame is one of three universities in the Indiana participating in the model program.

The program is the Eugene McClory, Associate Director of the CSC, and was developed by the CSC and Center for the Homeless in October of 1992.

The grant was renewed for a second year this October and could possibly be renewed for a third year in October of 1994. Approximately $30,000 will be made available to the CSC and the Center for the Homeless through the grant.

Bucscano said, "We will focus our efforts on the development of volunteer programs and incorporating service-learning into courses at Notre Dame."

Approximately 200 students are now volunteering at the Center for the Homeless. Through the incorporation of the CSC and Center for the Homeless in the United States, students also spent some time at the Center. McClory thinks the volunteer opportunities will benefit not only the community but also the students who participate.

The programs will provide students with a better understanding of the needs of the community and others, a better understanding of the needs of the community and others, and a better understanding of the needs of the community and others. Badin and PW meet in stadium

By SCOTT CLEMENTE
Sports Writer

After two months of football, the Women's Interhall field has been narrowed to two teams. This Sunday at 11 a.m., Badin will face Pasquerilla West in Notre Dame Stadium for the league title.

Badin finished the regular season as the No. 1 team in the league while PW was ranked No. 2. Sunday will be the first meeting of the two teams.

In the semi-finals of the playoffs, Badin escaped with a 26-18 victory over Howard while PW defeated Lewis 20-6.

This will be Badin's first trip to the championship game as a women's hall. The men reached the finals once before the dorm was converted.

Defensive back Shelly Dillenburger is looking forward to playing for the championship. "We're very excited," said the sophomore. "It's been our goal all year."

To win the game the Badin defense will have to shut down PW quarterback Bethany Riddle. Riddle, a senior, threw for two touchdowns in the Weasels' victory over Lewis.

PW will also have their hands full stopping a Badin team that lost only one game the entire season.

Both teams are looking forward to the game. "We are just trying to practice normally," said Dillenburger. "We have to refocus for the game on Sunday."

Running back Tina Fuoco leads Badin into Sunday's Interhall championship game in Notre Dame Stadium against Pasquerilla West.

Stanford bids for upset

By G.R. NELSON
Sports Writer

At noon this Sunday in Notre Dame Stadium, upset Stanford battles favored Morrissey for the Men's Interhall Championship.

Morrissey's route to the championship was very simple. They have dominated every opponent in amassing a 6-0 record. Morrissey's defense has allowed only one touchdown all year and their offense has only once been held to less than two scores.

Stanford has struggled, even in the playoffs, but they have made it this far. "We are not always pretty," said Stanford's Chad Smock, "but we are effective."

Morrissey's defense is pretty. They have an outstanding passing attack. Quarterback Scott Taylor is arguably the best in interhall play. "Taylor is awesome," said Stanford captain Chris Pollina.

Taylor also has the weapons to work with in running back Justin Krue and receiver Tom Fitzpatrick. Add their strong offensive line, and Morrissey's offense is a complete package.

Stanford's defense will be challenging, but they are ready. "Morrissey's defense is the best we've faced," said Stanford's Bret Galley, "but we believe in our defense."

Stanford's offense has moved the ball, especially on the ground, on everyone, and Morrissey should be no exception. However, the Stanford attack, led by quarterback Mike Brown and running backs Lamar Gallery and Pollina, must avoid the turnovers to have a chance to defeat Morrissey. "We cannot make mistakes," said Pollina.

Special teams could play a part in the outcome. Morrissey's are outstanding, while Stanford's are inconsistent. "Special teams are a key part of our success," said Morrissey captain George Funder.

To Morrissey, this game is no different from any other. "We are not going to do anything different," said Funder. "We will do what we've done all year long." That is mixing a strong defense and special teams with an incredible offense.

Stanford accepts their underdog status but believes it has what it takes to shock Morrissey. "We will play physical football," said Galley. "And the rest will take care of itself."

but he can really deal it from the left side," said Murphy of the standout with equally impressive summer league stats. In 31 innings last summer, Marino struck out 52 and gave up four earned runs.

Holy Cross High coach Lou Carboni also had only praise for Marino who was recruited by Pittsburgh and Tulane along with Notre Dame.

"He's the kind of guy you really like to have in pressure situations. He's really determined and likes to have to ball in tight jams," said Carboni.

and they seem to enjoy it," he noted.

Recruiters say the best coached talent is found in the midwest, according to Wood. Saint Mary's is the first female team that Wood has ever coached. Although he knows men will always be bigger and stronger, he says, "Every year girls pick their game up a step." ***

So what about the movie everyone asks?

The idea for "Hoosiers" originated when its writer and director were students. They were in college when Milan was experiencing its success. They vowed to one day turn the story into a movie. And they did.

A lot of the movie was glamorized by Hollywood, but there are also a lot of parallels, according to Wood. He declined an offer to work as an advisor for the film. He also turned down an opportunity to appear in the film.

It could never get any better than the real thing," he said. "I had a front row seat in the middle of the court and we won." The Woods have a collection of clippings and photographs from Milan and the movie to remind them of the glory days.

Despite the fame, Wood has not forgotten the little people. A reporter from the Miami Herald called to interview Wood for a story on "Hoosiers." Wood recognized the man by name and asked if he had been a student at North Central.

"Yes, it was," the man said. "I had you in Drivers Ed." Wood responded to the story of Milan. Sometimes people just stop by his home.

"His story, however, is far more inspiring than many of these fans realize," said Carboni. Marvin Wood was diagnosed with lymphatic cancer a few years ago. His illness forced him to sit out a season at Saint Mary's, but it made him a part of medical history as well as sports history.

Wood underwent an experimental form of autogenous (self) bone marrow transplant. Instead of removing Woods' bone marrow as is traditionally done in such a procedure, the doctors harvested stem cells, which are the youngest white blood cells. After treatment, the cells were re-inserted into his body and returned to the bone marrow where they originated.

"It worked for me," Wood said. He is now cancer-free and has not taken any medication for two years.

"The doctors tell me we've whipped it," he said. "It was a battle, but I knew that if they kept me on two feet long enough it was a battle I could win."

Another victory for the underdog. ***

These days, Wood is taking it one battle at a time. The next challenge comes this weekend when Saint Mary's basketball faces Indiana Wesleyan, Denison, and Kalamazoo in a tournament. Once again, a win for Wood's team is not likely.

"I've been the underdog all my life. This is nothing new," he said.

Who knows? Maybe this weekend will prove to be another opportunity for a major motion picture. If not, it will surely be another interesting chapter of Wood's life.

The Observer is always looking for capable minds. Check out the opportunities.
The blue collar work ethic of his pitchers took the Notre Dame baseball team to within a game of the College World Series for the second straight year last summer, but three of those pitchers were lost to graduation.

The first step to filling the shoes of Chris Michalak, David Sinnes, and Al Walania, who combined for 26 of Notre Dame's 46 wins last year, came yesterday when Irish coach Pat Murphy announced the signing of three high school pitchers yesterday. Three standout pitchers signed national letters of intent to attend the University of Notre Dame as student athletes and play baseball for the Irish in the fall of 1994.

"Our program's first and foremost priority was to go out and solidify our pitching staff, which was decimated last year with the graduation of some very talented players," said Murphy.

"We are extremely pleased with those who have signed, and each have the ability to step in immediately and contribute to the University of Notre Dame and its baseball team." The three pitchers, Christian Murphy, Dan Slavisky, and Mark Marano, all have outstanding statistics heading into their senior years and fit into the Irish mold of hard-working, no-nonsense competitors.

Parker, a right-hander from Albuquerque, New Mexico, has led his Eldorado High School team to two straight 4A state championships with a perfect 17-0 record. A two-year all-state, all-district and all-city selection, Parker, also considered Stanford, Arizona and Rice.

Murphy had only praise for Parker. "He's a competitor. He'll be a great one in the college ranks," he said.

Slavisky, a right-hander from Mt. Pleasant, Pennsylvania, is considered a preseason high school All-American. Last season, Slavisky posted a 13-0 record with a 0.76 earned run average while striking out 199 batters in 146 innings of league play over the summer. Also a forward on the Mt. Pleasant basketball team, the 6-3 Slavisky was looking at Ohio State, Penn State and Yale. Mt. Pleasant coach Dennis Mihalik said of Slavisky, "His strengths are that he's a pitcher and not a thrower, and a real fierce competitor."

Lefty Mark Marino of Chalmers, Louisiana is the final Irish signee after striking out 36 and allowing just one earned run on nine hits in 22 and two-thirds innings last year.

"He may be small in stature, but he has a big heart and a big work ethic," said Murphy of Marino. "He'll be a great one in the college ranks," he said.

The future looks bright for the Irish pitching staff as Murphy begins his ninth season as the head baseball coach. The three pitchers were lost to graduation.
