Poor, land injustices addressed
By LAURA FERGUSON
Saint Mary's News Editor

This summer, the congregation of the Holy Cross voted to take a corporate stand on global land rights and reforms.

This statement places the congregation firmly on the side of the world's poor and against the injustices done to them by more powerful forces.

The Congregation's stand aligns with a trend whenever possible to:

- Secure the rights of the poor and disenchanted
- Ensure affordable housing, especially for the poor
- Provide fair economic exchange between work and the fruits of the land
- Make persons aware of unjust use of the land to the detriment of the poor
- Challenge the structures that hold the poor captive to the greed of institutions, conglomerates, and individuals of wealth.
- Preserve and restore the land.

Letters from the Congregation were sent to President Bill Clinton, the department of Agriculture, defense, interior and state, the Senate, House of Representatives, the U.S. Catholic Conference of Bishops and local Ordinaries of each American diocese.

"In the 150 years of serving God's people throughout the world, the Sisters of the Holy Cross have lived in the needs of the indigenous and the marginalized poor, primarily through education and health services," stated the letter.

"In other programs and services, also, the goal has always been to assist the ongoing development of the people, their culture and their society."

According to Congregation Archivist and member of the Justice Committee, Sr. Jeanne Finske, C.S.C., the Congregation has yet to receive a response from this mailing.

In addition to bringing this issue to the attention of national leaders, Sisters of the Holy Cross working in areas such as Bangladesh, Peru, and Brazil, are helping on the village level.

"The sisters are working directly with the people involved to help educate the villagers and create their own legal structures to deal with the problems themselves," Finske said.

"So much farming land is no longer exclusively shared, but out of necessity, they continue "it's a matter of survival, but not of business," she continued.

"Their main concerns is for business and not for the land and this results in forced removal of indigenous and tribal people."

The statement was drafted by the Congregation's Justice Committee over the past two years and was formally accept-ated at the most recent chapter meeting of the Congregation.

Kabat to show award winning film, lecture
By AMY SCHMIDT
News Writer

Stacey Kabat, 1993 Academy Award Winner for Best Documentary short subject, will be featured in an upcoming lecture Thursday night at 7:30 p.m. in Heil's Hall.

Kabat's film, "Defending Our Lives," focuses on women who have been convicted for killing their batterers, and the problems they have faced.

Since its release, three of the eight women featured have received suspended sentences, and two others have been convicted for committed sentences.

As the daughter and grand-daughter of battered women, Kabat has special interest in human rights work, ranging from women's issues to Amnesty International. Her work also received national recognition when she won the 1992 Reebok Human Rights Award.

The showing of the 40-minute film is being co-sponsored by the Student Union Board and Student Activities.

Members of SUB decided over the summer to bring Kabat's work to campus.

We decided that it is a program that the University would benefit from seeing, especially because it is not just a lecture," said Kevin Klaau, programming director for the SUB.

Although the subject has only recently attracted national interest, the Surgeon General has said that domestic violence is the nation's leading cause of injury to women.

Kabat's work centers on women's self-help groups and her women's rights agency, Battered Women Fighting for Justice, which has helped open up otherwise would speak out. The film is a great way to learn about the problem.

"I think that it domestic violence is a subject that has gotten a lot of attention with the recent O.J. Simpson trial," he said to the Klaau. "Hopefully, many students will have opened up otherwise will speak out."

"The sound of invasion is already in our ears," said ultra-nationalist politician Vladimir Jeanjean. "The sound of invasion is already in our ears," said ultra-nationalist politician Vladimir Jeanjean.

Who did it?
The Clubhouse at Saint Mary's became the scene of a murder last night during "Murder on the Roofs." Two Saint Mary's students were enlisted to help members of a traveling murder mystery group perform the crime.

Forces nearly ready for Haitian rulers

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti

A U.S. warship steamed within sight of the capital today and planes dropped propaganda leaflets in the Delmas section of the capital, local radio reported.

"The sound of invasion is already in our ears," said ultra-nationalist politician Vladimir Jeanjean.

Offshore from Port-au-Prince, a gray U.S.-flagged cutter was visible, heading rapidly northward in the Caribbean. At the same time, the planes, including two U.S. Army Blackhawk helicopters, flew over the Haitian capital.

"The sound of invasion is already in our ears," said ultra-nationalist politician Vladimir Jeanjean.

In one area, a plane flew so low it shook houses and threw dust onto the streets and a provision that will allow a U.S. Army Blackhawk helicopter to fly over the roofs in Delmas.

"This law can save children's lives," Clinton told the nation's U.S. attorneys gathered in the White House State Dining Room.

"This law can save children's lives," Clinton told the nation's U.S. attorneys gathered in the White House State Dining Room.

He ordered the prosecutors in the next 100 days to develop a strategy to implement the provisions of the law, which also bans the transfer or sale of handguns to children, is not retroactive.

"Except when hunting or target shooting with a parent or other responsible adult, young people simply shouldn't be carrying guns, period," Clinton said.

"This provision is critical to our ability to make our schools and neighborhoods safe," he said.

The number of minors arrested for murder more than doubled between 1983 and 1992, from 1,175 to 2,680, according to FBI statistics.

Clinton stressed that planning is crucial to translate the law from words on paper to action.

"If the law instead "is widely ignored and never enforced, it will be a terrible shame because this law can save children's lives," Clinton said. "If we can enforce this, it will make a massive difference in the problem of youth violence."

"When any American is killed, it's a tragedy " when kids are killing kids, it's a national disgrace," Kohl said.

"This is an area where we have been the struggle to get the bill passed. It nearly died in both chambers in the last month until some moderate Republicans stepped up," he said.

"It was one of the more interesting and rigorous legislative exercises we've had around here in a long time," Clinton said.
A woman's place is in the Church

I am Catholic because I believe in the divinity and humanity; I believe in the Good God, the Forgiven-ness of sins; I believe in and humanity; I believe in the Church. I can only find the answer to these questions in the Church. I do not feel out of place in the Church. I contribute to the all-inclusive and universal Church. Sex is not the basis for exclusion from the priesthood.

Moira Walsh's letter in the Observer (Sept. 7) attempts to support the Pope's latest reaffirmation of reserving the priesthood for the human, rather than God and man? Therefore, we stress that Christ is inseparably God and humanity. "If the priest is representing Christ, he should not be priests is often the argument used to explain why women shouldn't be priests is often the argument used in favor of their ordination! A discussion with some experienced theologians helped me to better understand why the Church's explanation for not allowing female priests is illogical. The Vatican attempts to reason that Jesus did not freely choose women because women cannot not stand for the priesthood. The problem with this argument is that the Jesus' exact intentions. The Pope claims the sex of the priest is essential, but there is no substantial foundation for this belief. The explanation of ordination, along with the other sacraments, were formulated through a reading back of scripture. Just because Jesus didn't have women apostles does not mean that He wouldn't ordain women today. A secondary reason used to explain why women are incapable of being priests is based on Jesus' manhood. This is the argument Wallach put forward in the Associated Press. A paper mill worker accidentally shot himself while drunk and went to work the next morning with a bullet in his brain. Robert Cloutier, 39, was hospitalized Wednesday in fair condition. He was admitted Monday with a history of back pain, headaches and other problems. The police said Cloutier was asked about his swollen face. Police Capt. Barney Velliere said Cloutier had been drinking Sunday night and was in his room when his weapon accidentally discharged into his jaw. He tended to the wound himself and was able to work Monday. "It's pretty remarkable to me someone could shoot themselves in the jaw and facial area, clean themselves up and go to work," Velliere said. "Go figure."

ANNOUNCING TWO NEW CREF ACCOUNTS

YOU'RE LOOKING AT TWO COMPLETELY OPPOSITE, FUNDAMENTALLY DIFFERENT WAYS TO INVEST IN STOCKS. WE RECOMMEND BOTH.

Introducing the CREF Growth Account and the CREF Equity Index Account.

Whether you want a fund that selects specific stocks or one that covers the market, we're on the same page. Our new CREF Growth and CREF Equity Index Accounts use two distinct strategies for investing in the market, but both aim to provide what every smart investor looks for: long-term growth that outpaces inflation.*

The CREF Growth Account searches for individual companies that are poised for superior growth. In contrast, the Equity Index Account looks for more than just growth potential; it also finds promising stocks within the Russell 3000® a broad index of U.S. stocks.

Unlike our CREF Stock Account, which combines active, indexed, and foreign investing, and our Global Equities Account, which accesses the opportunities worldwide, the new funds are managed by experienced investment professionals. They're the same experts who have made TIAA-CREF a leader in a system in the U.S., managing over $30 billion in assets.

Gene may help in fight against cancer

The Observer • NEWS
Thursday, September 15, 1994

WASHINGTON

Three teams of U.S. researchers have won the worldwide race to isolate the gene that causes the inherited form of breast cancer, the journal Science reported today.

The gene, called BRCA1, is believed to cause 5 percent of breast cancer cases. Isolation of the gene by researchers from the National Institutes of Health, Myriad Genetics Corp.

and a University of Utah professor — was first reported Tuesday by NBC News. Isolation of the gene will enable scientists to develop a test to identify women who carry BRCA1, giving them an opportunity to identify breast cancer or to make the more difficult decision of having a mastectomy to forestall the disease.

Some researchers believe such a test could be developed within two years. Scientists have known for years that the BRCA1 gene exists, and more than a dozen research facilities around the world have been working to pinpoint it.

Science announced today that the work by Myriad Genetics’ Douglas Easton, the University of Utah’s Andrew Skolnick and Roger Wiseman of the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences had passed peer review and would be printed in its Oct. 7 issue. But the journal was releasing copies of the work later today.

About 182,000 women are diagnosed with breast cancer in the United States each year, and 46,000 die, according to the American Cancer Society.

Experts have said women with the altered gene have about a 60 percent chance of developing breast cancer before age 50 and an 85 percent chance by age 65.

The researchers couldn’t immediately be reached for comment. NIH refused to discuss the findings.
Minorities, women under-represented in farms

By ROBERT GREENE
Associated Press

WASHINGTON
Minority and female farmers may lose thousands of dollars in government payments because white male farmers dominate local committees that run programs, says a private report released Wednesday.

The study was conducted by two environmental groups, the Environmental Working Group and the National Audubon Society, that want changes in the local committee structure that would also put more environmentalists in control.

"It's in line with our standard argument that USDA (the Department of Agriculture) needs to come into the modern era and serve more than agrarian interests," said Kenneth A. Cook, president of the Environmental Working Group.

The groups support a proposal by Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy to have the secretary appoint some committee members.

Farm groups have opposed the move as anti-democratic. The House and Senate Agriculture committees removed the proposal from a pending bill to reorganize the Agriculture Department.

But black and female members of the House Agriculture Committee are trying to revive some form of the original proposal. And the issue will certainly come up in debate next year on the 1995 farm bill.

The study found that in 1992, minorities were elected to 169, or 1.9 percent, of the 9,030 seats on county committees of the Agricultural Conservation and Conservation Service, which runs commodity programs. Minorities at the time represented 4.8 percent of those able to vote or run.

Women were elected to 453 seats, or 5 percent, even though they made up 28 percent of those eligible to vote and be elected.

In one state, Mississippi, minorities accounted for 16 percent of eligible voters but had only one representative out of 245. The study also examined various internal findings by the department that the committees typically assigned women and minority farmers lower "program yields" per acre.

Those yields, based in part on historical production, help determine the volume of cotton, rice, corn, wheat and other crops on which government payments are made.

The report noted that the reasons for the lower yields are varied and complicated, sometimes including lower actual yields, reflecting smaller, poorer farms with less to spend on fertilizer or herbicides. Soil types and other variables were not accounted for.

Another factor is the 1985 farm bill, which from yields for all producers in an effort to cut costs.

But the groups said that more female and minority representation would have led to better ways of reaching disadvantaged farmers.

The study calculated the probable impact of yield differences on assistance between 1986 and 1989.

Scarf dispute divides France

PARIS
Teachers are upset, Muslims outraged. The extreme right, for once, thinks the government is right on target.

All agree on one thing: By decreeing that Muslim girls cannot wear traditional Islamic head scarves, or "scarves," to state schools, the Education Ministry has rekindled one of the France's most divisive issues: the battle for Muslim girls to keep wearing their "hijab" in schools.

A coalition of moderate Muslim groups, mostly supporters of secular education, said the "climate of intolerance developing in our country" has prompted them to consider pulling Muslim children out of state schools.

"What crime have these girls committed to deserve a punishment?" the coalition asked in a statement, warning that Muslim girls feel increasingly excluded from French society.

The coalition demanded a meeting with Education Minister Francois Bayrou, who ignited the controversy by disclosing in a magazine interview published Saturday that he is prohibiting Islamic scarves at state schools.

"I believe Muslims have the same rights as the rest of us," Bayrou said in the interview.

If Bayrou means his words, "the ban should be respected," authorities from the Muslim community have told the minister.

But Bayrou's ban and several court decisions have divided France ever since the March 1997 "law against slavery" forbade wearing "ostentatious" signs that separate youths from each other. Islamic head coverings undermined the rule of public schools in promoting assimilation of students of foreign origin, he said.

The dispute over Islamic scarves has been a national controversy since three Muslim girls were expelled from a Paris-area junior high school in 1989. After much soul-searching, the Socialist government backed away from an outright ban and several court decisions upheld students' rights to wear scarves.

I just cleared up "The Case Of The Vanishing Ink", and was cleaning off my desk when it hit me like a ream of paper: even my most brilliant work looked dull.

The reason? Everything was in black and white. So I said to myself, "Mr. Print Detective, you need a color printer." I made a phone call and received a tip from one of my sources at 1-800-848-4123, "The Canon BJC-600 is a sure thing for color."

It sounded good, but I had to investigate. After all, I am Nick Canon, Print Detective. Now, there are a lot gray areas in color printers. Like cost-per-page, color quality and speed. So I made a bee-line to the lab to have a little chat with my pal, Specs. I knew he knew what I needed to know.

The facts prove the BJC-600 costs about half as much to operate as most other color ink jet printers. - NICK

His desk looked like a bomb had gone off. There were printer parts everywhere.

"Specs, you ever seen a Canon BJC-600?"

He peered up through his specs, "You're one right now." I was intrigued. He went on, "It's also optimized for printing brilliant color on low-cost plain paper." "But I thought I had to fork out all my dough on special coated paper," I exclaimed.

"Not with the BJC-600," he replied "I see," I said. He said I hadn't seen anything yet, and showed me a print sample. The color was more than swell. It was killer.

"What about speed?" I inquired.

"It's fast" he fired back. He slowly explained, "You see the BJC-600 has three times as many nozzles as its nearest competitor."

It was heady stuff, but I knew what it all meant.

I had finally found a color printer that was head and shoulders above the rest, and wouldn't cost an arm and leg to own.

Well, I guess you could say that "Before you buy a printer, it pays and saves to investigate."

Through all the numbing accounts of 131 dead, the matter-of-fact stories about each and every person is a sacred life. Each of us was born—that man had been just the way we were. We each had a mother who was pregnant with us and who year-old girl) told me that now she has a new appreciation for the universality of being born. And now it’s not to be.

We’ve made all the important mathematical calculations necessary when a child’s parents both work at Notre Dame: Kevin will (hopefully) be a member of the Class of 2016 (someone told me to be sure and add in the year he’ll take off after high school to ride his Harley cross-country. Oh, great—I’m already practicing my firm “No, and that’s final” in the mirror).

But something else happened to me this summer. Kevin’s birth has transformed the way I see other people. While I was pregnant, a friend of mine (who has a five-year-old girl) told me that now she has a new appreciation for the universality of birth: whenever she looks at people, she thinks, “Wow, they were born!” Now I do too—I look around me when I’m walking on the quad or in the mall and I realize that every single person I see was born just the way Kevin was, just the way I was, just the way we were. We each had a mother who was pregnant with us and who carried us for nine months and who gave birth to us. Hey, there’s no other way to get here, folks, and being born is something that absolutely every single one of us shares, even if we have nothing else whatsoever in common.

I got a letter the other week from Fr. Tom McDermott, who many of you may remember. He’s over in Africa now, in Uganda. In his letter he told a story that again made me realize that it is person by person that we often understand and appreciate life most fully.

...we had a wonderful ceremony to witness and receive the final vows of Jamie Busara... a Tutsi from Rwanda, whose family came out to Uganda in the ’90’s during a previous killing spree. Only last year his father and brother and many others returned to try life again in Kigali, and on the very day of his final profession, James received confirmation from his cousin that his father was killed in this recent set of massacres.

The news accounts about Rwanda kept documenting the numbers—thousands and thousands dead—but suddenly I was able to see them one by one by one, James Burasa’s father, a baby just like Kevin, a mother just like me, a brother or sister just like you.

Last Sunday at Mass a young woman prayed for her mother’s boss—he had died on the now too-familiar flight 427 outside of Pittsburgh. And once again, through all the numbing accounts of “131 dead,” the matters-of-fact stories about engines and reverse thrusters and unidentifiable body parts, it came home to me that each and every person is a sacred life. Each of us was born—that man had been...

Hades, I mean Haiti, is a hot topic right now. Maybe not here at Notre Dame, though. Most students would probably rather see an invasion of East Lansing, or at least a commando raid on the East Lansing's most reputable liar, General Dole. But Haiti it is, for the moment anyway.

I have a sentimental regard for Haiti. Looking back, I can see my mock concern for the tiny nation before last year's FSG game, when I proposed forgoing the big win to show our support.

In the same tentative, abstract way I respect this uncharacteristic project of President Clinton's. But a Gingrich, a Quayle, a Bush, a Helms: what can be said of these men other than that they represent the worst of our system? If the President had opposed the invasion, you can bet your bottom dollar that Dole would be out trumping the tub for the boat people, and calling the President an irresolute milquetoast, and a draft-dodging peacenik, and all the rest of it. (As if the Republicans didn't wish the boat people in Davy Jones' locker with all their hearts.)
Public Enemy’s long awaited Mess Age

ROB ADAMS

Mess Sick Critic

Originally set to be released in spring of 1993, Public Enemy’s Mess Sick-N-Hour Mess Age went through countless delays, one name change, and a couple of Flavor Flav (“Sparkplug”) arrests before it was finally in stores on August 5th, of this year.

Critics were lining up to dismiss the album months before it came out, declaring that Chuck D was too old and had nothing else to rap about. However, as the Flav tells you on their 1988 masterpiece, It Takes A Nation of Millions to Hold Us Back, “Don’t Believe the Hype.”

Where the message is concerned, Public Enemy has scored their hardest album yet. With no spaces in between songs, they don’t even take one second to catch their breath. Chuck D has said in the past that half of his rhymes are designed to enter your mind and make you think, while the other half is just-gibberish; this is seemingly not the case with Mess Age—all the lyrics are raw to the core, with no wasted word.

“Give it Up,” the first single, is a denouncement of the current “gangsta poster,” “40’s,” and “blunts” that have become commonplace in today’s hip-hop music. The snare, leather and bass beat dominates, supported by a low, deep bass groove.

A signal of desperate urgency is thwarted through the speakers in “What Side You On,” which features fantastic live drums by Nathaniel Townsley III as well as extraordinary vocals by Chuck, Flav, and all the background singers.

And if you thought the beat slowed down, “Bedlam 13:13” continues the furious attack. “Good E muff to know no end/Thru it out the window/With the super ninja,” snaps Chuck with Flav providing the usual support.

“Live and Undrugged Part I” is a powerful exploration into dark funk, with a string section reminiscent of a horror flick and bass lines thicker than butter.

A raucous introduction explodes into the first and strongest jam on the disc, “Whole Lotta Love Goin’ On in the Middle of Hell,” which features so many layers of sound that it is impossible to hear them all unless it is played Really Loud.

A key factor in every Public Enemy song ever written is inspiration. When Chuck D writes something down and then figures out a way to express it onto record, he means it. This is a man who was recruited by Rick Rubin to rap, but didn’t want to because he thought it was just for kids. All Chuck Bicyclenuts (this given last name) ever wanted to do was reach people with his art.

“Death of a Carjacker” is an almost spoken-word (a la the end of “I Don’t Wanna Be Called”) essay on a momentary lapse of rationality resulting in a failed attempt to steal a car. Amidst slippery organ licks and wah-wah infected guitar samples, Chuck tells the story. “This ain’t nothin but another/Headline statistic, two brothers/But one went ballistic.”

In “So Whatcha Gone Do Now,” Chuck continues his rage against the handbag-onesque rapers who have no positive message and hope for their listeners. Ironically enough, most of these rappers were probably influenced by Public Enemy; they took their own message too far, however, and are probably stung by Chuck D’s lyrical posture. The sublime “rap, guns, drugs, and money” chant is eerie throughout the background as it meshes with sampled bits of news.

Although the Mess Age is their strongest yet, the Muse Sick leaves a few grooves to be desired. Still hardcore by anybody’s standards, it doesn’t match the credentials of 1990’s Fear Of A Black Planet.

When one of the most important and influential groups of our generation releases their first full-length CD in three years, there is bound to be hype, both good and bad. Mess Sick-N-Hour Mess Age continues the PE tradition of amazing production, completely up-to-date hip-hop, excellent rhymes and vocals, and should definitely not be missed.

Storytelling at The Snite combines old traditions with works of art

By MELANIE SCHROEDER

Access Wire

Remember those stories you used to read as a kid? Those old favorites like The Tin Soldier, the adventures of Pinochio, and the tales about Baba Yaga the nasty old witch from Russian folklore?

Well, this Saturday you can relive the days of yesteryear at The Snite Museum of Art, during their first storytelling session entitled, “Toys That Come to Life.”

This is the first reading in an annual series of storytelling sessions that one Snite offers to the community throughout the course of the year.

The sessions use some of the artwork in the Snite Museum as well as some folk music as a means of telling traditional stories centering around particular themes, according to coordinator Diana Matthias.

“We hope to combine the visual art work, the art of storytelling, and the art of folklore,” she added.

“The museum provides the works of art, but the storytelling sessions are a way to bring together oral traditional stories and poetry with the artwork,” she said.

Although the storytelling sessions always attract a large audience of all ages, there is always room for more eager participants and listeners, especially among the student body, according to Matthias.

“If more students take an interest in the sessions, the program could be expanded,” she said.

Some of these sessions will focus on stories of a particular ethnic background. The session scheduled for October 8, will focus on “Stories and Folk Songs From Latin America.” Students from the Notre Dame Hispanic American Association will select and perform the readings for this session.

Last spring, a storytelling session on African folktales took place, and there was a great deal of student participation.

According to Matthias, she hopes to see the same type of enthusiasm for the upcoming session on Latin American tales.

“The storytelling sessions provide a thread of oral history background of different civilizations from which we hope all participants can learn,” Matthias said.

The Snite has also scheduled five other sessions for the 1994-95 year. October 22, will be stories of “Beauties and Beasts.” December 10, stories of “Winter and Festivity” will be told, January 28, there will be stories of “Betrayal and Rescue,” March 4, there will be a session of “Lives of the Artists;” and to close the year there will be a session on “Spring and Rebirth” on April 29.

“Boys That Come to Life,” will take place Saturday from 10:30 a.m. until noon in the Annenberg Auditorium of the Snite Museum. The storytelling sessions are free and open to the public, and for people of all ages.

By the time Bud Selig stepped up to the microphone and began talking about being a bad day, everyone knew what was coming.

Baseball was done for 1994.

The unprecedented pennant races, the expanded playoffs, even the World Series, finished.

Yet when Selig announced that the season was canceled, not even he could know the answer.

What's next?

When people think back to what the final image of the '94 season will be, it may be Bud Selig at a press conference protesting the game and goading his teething but nevertheless game enough to dash ahead and hopes of men of people, union head Donald Fehr charged.

Twenty-six of the 28 teams voted to cancel. Baltimore owner Peter Angelos agreed with idea, but wanted to cancel.

The resolution Cincinnati's Bob Smith said minor league should be able to continue the season, Selig said.

This is a sad day," Selig said in a statement read by Fehr. "Nobody wanted this to happen, but the continuing player strike leaves us no choice but to take this action."

President Clinton, meanwhile, said maybe it was time for government to consider taking over the show and consider taking away baseball's antitrust exemption.

The taxpayers, he may soon start thinking.

played perhaps an even greater role. "We were the better-conditioned team," said Petrucci. "At the end of the game our players were still running and their players weren't."

The extra bit of energy may have allowed junior midfielder Michelle McCarthy to steal a William & Mary throw-in and score unassisted with just 25 seconds remaining in the second overtime, preventing the Irish from settling for a tie. "Going into William & Mary we had never given up a goal this season," said Petrucci. "They scored in the first half, and I think we were a little shocked."

"We found out we're not invincible, but the way we came back will be good for us the rest of the season. Now we know that we can."

Belles expect Calvin College to be tough

By JENNIFER LEWIS
Saint Mary's Sports Editor

Saint Mary's is expecting a challenging match this evening against Calvin College. The Belles have only faced Calvin twice before, however the team has been looking forward to this game all season according to coach Julie Schroeder-Biek.

"Calvin ended with a strong record last year," Schroeder-Biek said. "And their team was relatively young, therefore we expect a tough game."

Saint Mary's has been working on their mental game as well as their physical game. Their main goal is to have a quicker offense, according to Schroeder-Biek; they have been working on new strategies all week.

"Going into William & Mary the game was relatively young, therefore we found out we're not in," said Petrucci.

Belles expect Calvin College to be tough

"We are trying to do anything we can to mix up Calvin's offense," Schroeder-Biek explained. "Last night's practice didn't go over very well," Schroeder-Biek added. "I think the girls might have been suffering from information overload."

"At yesterday's practice we were slow and not communicating, something we will have to do in the game," captain Ann Lawrence said. "I think the pressures of school are starting to build up."

Freshman starter Amy King is suffering from shoulder problems and will possibly not be starting tonight. Freshman Kelly Meyer will be start as setter and Sara Sironzenk will be substituting her in the game.
Not all throwback uniforms are equal

By ALAN ROBINSON
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH

The NFL is calling them throwback uniforms. Many of the Pittsburgh Steelers would prefer to throw them away.

They’re among the most distinctive of the old-style uniforms that will commemorate the NFL’s 75th anniversary, but they’re not wearing well with the Steelers.

The Steelers’ descriptions of the 1933 replica uniforms they’ll wear Sunday against the Indianapolis Colts range from “awful” to “ugly” to “bad.”

Pro or con, Levon Kirkland?
“Con,” he said. “Con, con, con, con. They wouldn’t look as bad if it wasn’t for those Grey Poupon pants we’ll wear. Maybe the guys were tougher back then, but we’re a bunch of soft guys. And we don’t like them.”

While many teams’ uniforms — the Raiders and Colts, for example — haven’t changed all that much, the Steelers’ uniforms have been altered significantly since the franchise’s founding as the Pirates by Art Rooney in 1933.

The ’33 Pirates wore bright yellow jerseys with a red Fort Duquesne and Fort Pitt, the two main Pennsylvania revolutionary forts — a logo that was on the official City of Pittsburgh shield in the 1930s.

“They’re awful,” Eric Green said. “They’re going to look funny.”

The players most dislike the mustard-colored pants, which were made of canvas in the 1930s.

“Man, they’re funny looking,” cornerback Tim McKyer said. “I’m glad we’ve got to wear them only twice,” Rod Woodson said. “They’re ugly.”

Offensive tackle John Jackson is one of the uniforms’ few proponents.

“I like them,” he said. “You’re always going to have your skeptics, but it’s not like we’re going to wear them every week of the season. I think they’re neat. If you don’t like them, take a chill.”

“Reggie said they might be able to shut us down, but I want to break him off for at least one score,” Kinder joked.

Holtz and the Irish hope Kinder’s old buddies will provide the perfect setting for a Notre Dame runaway.

Rangers continue winning ways

Ed Olczyk had three goals and an assist as the New York Rangers rallied from a three-goal deficit and beat the Pittsburgh Penguins 7-4 in their exhibition opener Wednesday night.

The Rangers managed just two goals on 16 shots against rookie goalie Patrick Lalime in the first half of the game, but then scored five against another rookie, Philippe De Pivot.

Olczyk, who played in just one of the Stanley Cup champion Rangers’ 23 playoff games last year, had two consecutive goals in the third period.

Pittsburgh built a 3-0 lead on two goals by Jaromir Jagr in the game’s first 3:03 and Martin Straka’s goal at 11:32.

are very direct and opportunists. It's a tough away game against a team that doesn't lose much at home.

"Yet, I believe we have the talent to win anywhere."

This ability to win anywhere comes from experience. Something that the Irish have plenty of with 12 seniors. They especially understand the importance of these games.

"The seniors know that the conference means an automatic bid," Oates explained. "This is our last chance at the NCAA championship."

Good news for the Irish is that junior forward Bill Lanza is expected to see some action tonight after sitting out with a knee injury.

SANDERS CHOOSES THE 49ERS

By DENNIS GEORGATOS
Associated Press

SANTA CLARA, Calif.

With the baseball season gone, Deion Sanders wasted no time closing in on a new job with the San Francisco 49ers.

A free-agent cornerback and Cincinnati Reds outfielder, Sanders shopped his services to several NFL teams while idled by the monthlong baseball players strike. On Wednesday, the owners called off the season.

With his baseball job gone, at least for this season, Sanders was ready to turn his attention to football, said his agent, Eugene Parker.

Sanders told an Atlanta television station he had decided against rejoining the Atlanta Falcons and intended to sign with the 49ers.

Club president Carmen Policy and Parker negotiated over the telephone for hours and Policy said Wednesday night they had reached a "meeting of the minds" on a one-year contract.

Sanders neglected a more lucrative offer from the Miami Dolphins, who have been weakened by injuries in the secondary.

"I'm disappointed," coach Don Shula said. "I thought we were in it and had a good chance. We pursued it hard these last few days."

In the 49ers' bid to sign Sanders, they freed $1.3 million of salary-cap space by restructuring the contracts of linebackers Gary Plummer and Ken Norton and safety Tim McDonald.

Policy said Sanders, a three-time Pro Bowler in five seasons with the Falcons, flew to the San Francisco Bay area on Wednesday to await the outcome of the negotiations.

"There are some very sensitive negotiations going on," Policy said. "We're talking numbers. We're talking incentives. We're talking a variety of things. We're even talking philosophy."

Just two weeks ago, Policy said the 49ers couldn't afford Sanders because of salary-cap constraints. Now he is optimistic but wary of competing offers.

"We're not in there alone," Policy said. "If I was to stand here and tell you it was done, I would be really acting foolishly. I don't know what's going on behind the scenes.

Belles expect more offense tonight

By BECKY MAYERNIK
Sports Writer

The 2-0 Saint Mary's soccer team hopes to continue their winning ways when they face Calvin College in a home game this afternoon at 4 p.m. The Belles hope to see a lot of support at today's game.

"Calvin College is very fast and this will be a much more difficult game for us," sophomore Shari Mateleski said. "Tomorrow's game will be a true test for us," sophomore Lisa Nichols said. "So far our competition has not been too strong and we haven't played any tough teams."

The Belles have been concentrating on scoring, and corner kicks in practice, and on making Calvin's defense work hard, according to Mateleski.

There are still some bad vibes between the two teams from last year's game, so this should be an intense game, said Nichols.

"One thing that we have on our side is that everyone on the team is very versatile and can play a lot of different positions," stated freshman Eileen Newell.

In addition to the injuries Saint Mary's is still dealing with, the weather should be a factor in today's game, stated Mateleski.

"We've been practicing each day in this extremely hot weather, so it could make a difference in our performance."

The Belles will be facing their toughest opponent of the young season, and are very confident about the game.

"We just need to pull together as a team tomorrow," Nichols said.

During the school year, every Notre Dame student has the urge to travel home and see old high school friends. This Saturday, Notre Dame sophomore tailback Randy Kinder will get the chance to reminisce when the Irish travel to East Lansing to play Michigan State.

Kinder, a high school All-American and the player of the year in Michigan two years ago, hasn’t felt any extra nerves going home to his old stomping grounds. “It hasn’t really hit me yet, but I’m sure I’ll start to feel it a little more on Friday night,” Kinder explained.

“It will be my only chance to play there,” he continued. “I can’t wait to play on the new turf in the stadium. It will be real exciting.”

Entering last season’s Michigan State game in South Bend, Kinder had only carried seven times for 26 yards. However, he exploded for 94 yards on 12 carries against his hometown team.

This year, Kinder has gained 41 yards on nine carries. Although Notre Dame has rushed for 163 yards per game thus far, Kinder feels the Irish have the potential for better things. “We have to get our running game going, because we haven’t played Notre Dame football,” commented Kinder. “Last year was the same situation until the Michigan State game when we got it going on the ground.”

An All-American sprinter in track, Kinder uses his breakaway speed and physical tools to punish opposing tacklers. Kinder’s talents in the backfield have meshed well with senior Lee Butch’s shifty moves and Ray Zellers’ blocking.

Kinder expects to see some more playing time this weekend to spice up the running game and put the Irish on the right track. “I’m hoping for the same type of performance as last year, except I want better stats and I would like to get into the end zone,” added Kinder.

“Randy Kinder will definitely play more,” Holz explained. “He’s a great competitor and a very physical football player.”

One of his old high school buddies is Michigan State sophomore linebacker Reggie Kinder.

The players don’t really want to be here right now. They have just finished practicing for almost two hours. It is cold. It is windy. And it starts to rain.

But they line up anyway. They stand and wait, ducking their heads to keep the rain from their faces. Coach Petrucelli gives the signal and they run. “C’mere Irish!” they huff through gritted teeth. “Let’s go, Irish!”

And when they finish they walk back, hands on their hips, to do it again. And again. And again.

And that’s why they win. “We have made some big changes,” said Irish women’s soccer coach Chris Petrucelli about his 1994 squad.

“I’ve changed our conditioning a lot,” said Petrucelli. “The strength and conditioning coach has had us doing a lot of aerobic workouts, and that has made a difference. The most visible difference is that Notre Dame is 4-0 instead of 3-1. After a tough match last Friday against no. 7 George Mason, the Irish traveled Sunday to face no. 10 William & Mary, where they escaped with a 4-3 overtime win.

“William & Mary had not played a game all week,” said Petrucelli. “They were fresh and we were beat up.”

The Irish trailed three different times in the match, but were always able to rally. “We had to come back more than once, but our players refused to lose,” said Petrucelli. “But while mental toughness was certainly important for the Irish, their physical condition
