Week to focus on ‘wellness’

By PEGGY LENCZEWSKI
News Writer

The Residence Hall Association focused on wellness last night at their weekly meeting, and discussed ways to help students achieve wellness, as part of Alcohol Awareness Week activities.

According to Colette Shaw, a Saint Mary’s College Residents Hall Director, “wellness is an active process” composed of spiritual, physical, intellectual, career-oriented, environmental, emotional, and social facets.

The goal of being well is to “have a balance between all of these things,” according to Shaw.

RHA hopes that the activities it plans for Alcohol Awareness Week will encourage students to become well; Shaw noted that it is not the intention of RHA to preach the evils of alcohol, or point the guilty finger at weekend party-givers.

Currently, no concrete activities have been planned, but many ideas have been discussed.

RHA will be sponsoring a United Way drive between October 4 and October 21. Committee members are needed to make this event a success.

Representatives will be nominated at the Individual Hall Council meetings.

RHA is trying to coordinate a recycling program through the individual halls. Once again, although the initiative is coordinated through RHA, it is up to individual halls to decide what they would like to do.

Other RHA news:

• Regina will be selling sweatshirts and hair clips soon. There will also be an aerobics class in the dance studio in the basement Mondays at eight o’clock.

• Le Mans Hall would like to start a tutoring program at St. Stevens. Anyone interested in being involved should talk to their Hall Council Representatives.

Weekend Wheels safe—for now

By BRAD PRENDERGAST

Despite recent concerns and controversies that threatened to shut it down, the Hall Presidents Council (HPC) determined last night that the Weekend Wheels program will continue through this school year.

However, Rich Palermo, co-chairman of the council, said that the HPC will form a committee to investigate alternatives in the event that the program becomes less useful.

“We are continuing it,” Palermo said, “but we are exploring other options just in case.”

The four-year-old program, which helps students off-campus bars and parties return home safely, has been plagued by occasional low ridership and abuse of its services.

The HPC voted strongly to maintain Weekend Wheels, a sign of the council’s strong endorsement of the program, according to Tara Bonner, coordinator of Weekend Wheels for the HPC.

“We’re not concerned about ridership,” Bonner said, “because if we can save one life with this, then it’s worth it.”

Ridership has been higher on home football weekends, with around 200 people using the service on the weekend of the Michigan game. However, on other weekends, the numbers have been much smaller. Only 30 people used it on the weekend of Sept. 16-17.

As part of its renewed support, the council plans to increase students’ awareness of the program.

Advertisements aimed at off-campus students will increase, and schedules of the bus service will be made available to everyone.

“We want people to talk it up in their dorms,” Bonner said, “and we will also work with the bars, since the service obviously benefits them as well.”

From the increase in advertising, the HPC hopes to establish a wider base of student support.

“We want to get the program up and ready,” Bonner said, “and then we’ll re-evaluate it at the end of the year.”

However, in the event that Weekend Wheels does not become more widely used, the council will be prepared with other options.

“We’ll be researching the alternatives by looking at what other schools around the country are doing,” Bonner said.

Palermo stressed that no other options have been discussed seriously yet.

“Nothing is concrete,” he said.

In other news discussed by the HPC in its meeting last night:

The HPC is sponsoring the painting of two South Bend homes on Saturday as part of the Northeast Neighborhood Rejuvenation Project.

According to Karen DuBay, coordinator of the project, anyone is welcome to volunteer.

“The project gets Notre Dame students involved in the community,” DuBay said. “We’re trying to give a more positive image of students at Notre Dame.”

Anyone interested in volunteering should contact DuBay by Friday evening.

Tragedy averted in accidental acid spill

By LIZ FORAN

An accident at the Radiation Building Tuesday morning caused a minor injury to a Notre Dame graduate student.

Assistant Director of Notre Dame Security Charles Hurley said that at about 11:36 a.m. a 28-year-old graduate student was carrying a 1 liter bottle of acid when she dropped it. The acid splashed onto her and around the room, causing the entire building to be evacuated due to irritating fumes from the spill.

The student was transported to St. Joseph Medical Center, where she was treated by flushing her skin with water. She was later released the same day, Hurley said.

Risk Management, a division of the Notre Dame Security Department, took care of the spill, according to Hurley.

Tom Quardanillo, captain of the Cadish of the Notre Dame Fire Department who was at the scene, said that Risk Management appeared to have cleaned up the spill safely and effectively.

“We were out there about half an hour,” he said. “It was a very serious incident, but it was taken care of with minimal injuries or additional injuries. Everyone involved did a good job.”

‘Future Force’ wins landslide freshmen election

Under the title the “Future of McCanless Hall,” who ran under the title “Future Force of 1998,” gained 55 percent of the vote to win a landslide victory in the Saint Mary’s freshmen class election yesterday.

The new president and vice president have many goals for the school year, which include class unity, community involvement, more interaction with Notre Dame, and campus improvements, such as refurbishing the recycling program.

Forty-six percent of the freshman class voted and two percent abstained. Of the other tickets, Shelley Kay Hackett of McCandless Hall and running mate Meghan McNally of McCandless Hall had 20 percent of the vote; Katie Mahon of LeMans Hall and Carrie Kootz of LeMans Hall, 15 percent; and Brenda Barry of McCandless Hall and Kathleen Policy of McCandless Hall, eight percent.

Students also voted for the general board, which has 13 members, but only six ran, and therefore won by acclamation. The new members are Anna Antes of Holy Cross Hall, Ellen Coleman of McCandless Hall, Jennifer Grossak of McCandless Hall, Claire Constant of Holy Cross Hall, Lisa Perry of Holy Cross Hall and Rachel Antes of Holy Cross Hall.

BC’s not the only reason to hit the road

Here I go again. Ah, autumn. The leaves lose their color. The air packs a bit more bite in the north wind. The sounds of the gridiron reverberate through campus. Spirit cheers from every corner of this campus.

And once again I hit the road this year off to Milwaukee. Why, I’ve seen more of this country on weekend trips in early November than I have on any vacation for quite some time. This year will mark my fifth road trip. A trip not for pleasure, but in pursuit of the brass ring, a goal if you will that has been mute would have been murder. Cleveland hasn’t done much to offer, but what city does when you’re there for only five hours.

I’m on the road this year off on my November tours. Monuments, history, culture, and another successful undertaking which turned out for naught.

My next two trips, as this year’s, began from a different locale—here at Notre Dame. My first stop took me to Minneapolis, Minnesota. The North Star was cool, a shopper’s paradise, but the same results were returned as the previous two years. All over the Midwest. Omaha, Nebraska.

What can you say about Omaha? I’ll just say I stayed at the hotel all weekend. I think that’s enough.

This year I hope will be different. I want to make my trip come to fruition. Milwaukee may just be the place. Many people, of course, are well known, particularly many a student on this campus. I hope Milwaukee will come through for me, fulfill my need for recognition. I have no idea if the road trip will continue, but will the weekend of pursuit of that special goal for me come to an end?

What is this goal you may ask? How wise of you to phrase it in the form of a question. If you said, “What is auditioning for Jeopardy?” you are correct. In all the press surrounding the new movie Quiz Show, I am making my own part of the quiz madness.

This year will be different. This year everything will change. Things will be in my favor, the call will come, the cash will start rolling in. A potential payoff of $25,000 or more, plus a trophy not to mention a new car. And then the Tournaments to come. Not a bad exchange, I give them the years of useless and trivial knowledge I have stored up and they reward me handomely.

And if I don’t get selected again this year? For the fifth year in a row? I will have more year of eligibility. One more chance to show what years of public education (and now private education) have taught me. That all for me to make my claims on the regularly televised program. More money, maybe I should just forget my last year of eligibility and head straight into the big leagues. Maybe not.

Think about what those dollars could do. I know the times since I’ve been here, they’ve been planning for quite some time. We me luck, I know my roommates will be wishing for that same thing as well.

Apparatus aside, suing a company doesn’t guarantee success

Sometimes it seems like suing a company is guaranteed to make a plaintiff a millionaire.

A secretary is awarded $7.1 million in a sexual harassment lawsuit against Chicago law firm Baker & McKenzie, although she worked at the firm for just three months. An 81-year-old woman receives a $2.9 million jury award against McDonald’s after suffering third-degree burns from the fast-food chain’s coffee.

Big awards like these grab grab big headlines. But the public often hears little about the aftermath as a judge cuts the award against McDonald’s $480,000, and Baker & McKenzie decision is likely to be appealed.

The views expressed in media reports is that the number of individuals suing companies and winning is increasing and that jury awards — especially in the emotionally charged areas of employment law and product liability — are climbing into the stratosphere.

The reality, however, is more complex. Yes, jury is sending messages to employers that discrimination and harassment at work are not acceptable. The number of awards is growing. But that’s because jury trials and punitive damages in such cases weren’t allowed before 1991 amendments to the Civil Rights Act.

“Tort reform for those cases would make it way through the pipeline,” said Christine Carty, a litigator with Viewpoint Graphics.

Yeltsin: Russia stronger since 1993 rebellion

As demonstrators ringed the old parliament building to mark the anniversary of a crushed rebellion, President Boris Yeltsin said that while the former communists had contended he chose the lesser of two evils by attacking a doctor and his escort rather than allowing abortions to be performed. Defense attorney Maureen Quinlan argued that Hill had tried legal ways of preventing abortions, including picketing clinics, speaking to doctors, and doing media interviews. She added that individuals had tried other methods ranging from opening crisis pregnancy centers to bombing clinics but all had failed to prevent abortions. The prosecution saw it another way. “He laid in wait and shot two elderly men in the head with buckshot and he knows he can’t protect him,” said Assistant U.S. Attorney David McGee.

PROTECTING WESTERN FORESTS A COSTLY AFFAIR

The Forest Service would have to spend $3.5 billion, roughly its annual budget, to deal with health and wild- fire concerns on just 50 million acres of public lands in the West, a congressional report says. Salvage logging, prescribed burning and other operations would probably cost an average of about $250 per acre over the 14 million acres of national forests in the region, the Congressional Research Service said in a report released Tuesday. The service, the research arm of the Library of Congress, also concluded that salvaging burned forest areas—harvesting debris, dying and burned trees — never produces enough money to offset the costs to the federal treasury. However, top officials for the Agriculture and Interior departments say the benefits of reduced fire threat and improved wildlife habitat often outweigh the costs.

Espy resigns amid controversy

WASHINGTON — Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy pleaded Tuesday to spend his last three months in office preparing a major farm bill, although a widening probe into his conduct promises to be a distraction.

A day after announcing his resignation, Espy was in Kansas City, Mo., promoting a distraction.

"I was going through a very critical period," said Sen. Thomas A. D aschle, D-D. S., one of Espy's most loyal backers in the Senate. "Mike has been a very aggressive and successful secretary, and this transition will have some effect on our momentum."

D aschle and Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., the top Republican on the Senate Agriculture Committee, say Espy can use his last few months to start the work of merging departments and closing field offices.

"A great deal ought to be done swiftly," Lugar said.

Small, the independent counsel, is looking into gifts that Espy was received from poultry companies and firms doing business with the department. Since the investigation originated with the department's Office of Inspector General, questions have also been raised about Espy's personal use of official travel and vehicles.

Espy, 40, has denied wrongdoing, but told departmental employees in Kansas City, "In politics, perception is reality. ... I have to leave."

The latest tangle involves a $1.2 million scholarship his companion, Patricia Dempsey, received from a foundation created by Tyson Foods Inc., the Arkansas poultry empire with close ties to President Clinton.

A senior administration official indicated Monday that while no law may have been broken, the incident looked like a breach of ethical standards.

D empsey's attorney, Jim Cole, refused to comment about the matter except to say Espy had nothing to do with the scholarship and Dempsey appears to face no legal difficulties herself. "She is her own individual person," he said.

Dempsey has accompanied Espy on several trips, including one in May 1993 when Espy was flying out of the Tyson-owned facility and flew back to Washington on a Tyson jet.

Legal maneuverings may delay Rosly trial

By TOM STRONG
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Rep. Dan Rostenkowski's flight to dismiss political corruption charges on constitutional grounds could delay his trial for at least a year, one of his lawyers says.

The defense argument that only the House has the power to recommend the member for violating its rules could lead to lengthy federal appeals, perhaps to the Supreme Court.

"It would be a minimum of months and a maximum of several years," Tom Buchanan, one of the Illinois Democrat's lawyers, said Tuesday. "It depends on how fast it moves."

Rostenkowski was indicted on 17 felony counts May 31. He is charged with converting $636,600 in federal funds and $56,267 in campaign funds to his personal use.

He has pleaded innocent and denied wrongdoing, but under House rules, he was forced to step aside as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee until the case is resolved.

As the defense and the government head to court Wednesday for oral arguments, District Judge Norma Holloway Johnson ruled that the House did not have to deluge court proceedings with any surprise arguments already made in court papers.

"The only thing that may happen is that a nice wave of a hand, a new way of packaging an old position, a clever analogy, a nice twist," said E. Lawrence Barcello Jr., a Washington lawyer working as a special prosecutor.

"Rostenkowski's arguments rely heavily on the constitutional provision allowing the House and Senate to police violations of their own rules.

"I think constitutional arguments have had little recent success in criminal cases against members of Congress. But the defense's chief lawyer, Dan Webb, said in legal motions: "No previous charges ever brought against any member of Congress were ever over and done with in violating the Constitution."

Mandela asks for U.S. aid

WASHINGTON — President Clinton welcomed Mandela to an exuberant White House ceremony underscoring the 76-year-old African leader's rise from imprisonment in the apartheid state to the presidency of South Africa's new democracy.

"People of the United States of America: Open your markets to us. People of the United States of America: Invest in our country."

"We will walk every mile with you and ... we will not grow weary on the way," Mandela said. Noting Mandela's 27 years in prison and emergence as the elected president, Clinton said, "You are living proof that the forces of justice and reconciliation can bridge any divide."

President Nelson Mandela's goal this week is to promote investment and business interest in the reborn South Africa. But economists predict from the U.S. government as well. A look at the aid Mandela has secured so far:

From the Clinton administration:

$600 million, three-year aid package

$225 million in loan guarantees to build housing and electricity projects in poor areas

From federal agencies:

A Peace Corps program to work in South Africa

Aid funds for prospective business investments

From corporate America:

A Pepsi-Cola joint venture, bolstered by prominent black Americans

A food fund to be announced this week

Associated Press blamed for orchestrating ethnic massacres want to participate in the rebel-installed government that overthrew them before they will allow Hutu refugees to return home.

Hutu leaders in neighboring Zaire told a U.N.-sponsored task force on repatriation there that they will allow Hutu refugees until a power-sharing deal is cut, the deputy commander of U.N. peacekeepers in Rwanda, Brig. Gen. Henry Anyidoho of Ghana, said Tuesday.

Anyidoho, the top U.N. official in the task force, returned Monday from visiting refugee camps in Zaire where he met with Hutu leaders, including former chief of military staff Augustin Bizimungu.

"They want to have a say in running the country politically," Anyidoho said. "They said very clearly that if they stay outside it cannot be considered a solution to the Rwandan situation."

But the new government that gained power in July is unlikely to offer concessions to Hutus it wants tried for war crimes. It says Hutus soldiers and civilian militias, spurned by officials of the ousted Hutu government, massacred more than 500,000 people, mostly Tutsis, after the death of Hutu President Juvenal Habyarimana in a mysterious April 6 plane crash.

Undersea earthquake jolts Japan, injures 200

By PETER LANDERS

Associated Press

TOKYO

An undersea earthquake jolted eastern Japan today, shaking buildings 650 miles away in Tokyo and injuring nearly 200 people. Tsunamis warnings were issued for the Pacific, including the west coast of the United States.

Hawaii closed its public schools and beaches this morning and ordered people in coastal areas to evacuate their homes.

Japan's Central Meteorological Agency estimated the preliminary magnitude of the quake at 7.9, making it the strongest to hit Japan in 26 years.

Japanese television stations broke off regular programming to broadcast continuous reports on the earthquake, showing maps of Japan with areas threatened by waves flashing in red.

Japan Broadcasting Corp. reported 196 people were injured. Hospital officials said most were cut by broken window glass or bruised by falling objects. Nearly all the injuries occurred in the northeastern main island of Hokkaido.

No deaths were reported.

The quake — which lasted more than a minute — was centered 13 miles beneath the floor of the Pacific Ocean, near the southern end of the sparsely populated Kuril Island chain and 650 miles from Tokyo.

On Hokkaido, the quake cracked roads, caused gas leaks and flooded streets. One fire was reported in the town of Nemuro.

More than 13,460 households in eastern Hokkaido had lost electric power as of midnight, said Kazuhiro Kojima of Hokkaido Electric Co.

People evacuated from low-lying areas in the city of Kushiro on Hokkaido island gathered in schools and public buildings and bedded down for the night. Water from broken mains flooded streets in Nemuro.

Ousted Rwandan Hutus demand power sharing

By ANGUS SHAW

Associated Press
Economic outlook optimistic

By JAMES H. RUBIN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON

The government's purcha-

ning power index and narrow economic measures grew at a slow rate in August, suggesting that the economy is still perking along. But some respondents think it may be reaching the limit of its ability to expand without inflation.

July's slight decline in the government's Leading Economic Indicators, a private forecasting service, may point to a slowdown in economic growth that could be enough to push interest rates higher.

The Commerce Department said Tuesday that its index of Leading Economic Indicators suggested a slight economic slowdown in August, the 13th straight month without a decline.

Since July 1993, the barometer has risen 11 times and remained unchanged twice. It fell slightly this July after two months of small gains. The last time it rose more than August was in March, when it jumped 1.3 percent.

"There is a good momentum in the economy," said economist Roger Brinner of DRI/McGraw Hill, a forecasting service in Lexington, Mass. "The index is consistent with a stream of news."

Analysts are looking to Friday's unemployment report for further signs the economy may be reaching the limit of its ability to expand without inflation. The jobless rate is 6.1 percent, which some analysts consider close to full employment.

The Federal Reserve, which has raised interest rates five times since February, pays par-icular attention to the job market for indications of worker shortages that could lead to higher wages and inflation.

"The economy is still perking along. There's no question about that," said Charles Hendro of Americanbrand, a forecasting service in Dallas. "The only question is whether there will be a buildup of inflationary pressures."

"The evidence is mounting that there will be some basis for the Fed raising interest rates. The economy is performing well, but there may be a logic in saying that this is the time to lean against the tide," he said.

Analysts expect the central bank's Federal Open Market

Committee to boost rates to 5.25 percent, a half point rise, when it meets Thursday afternoon.

"And they could raise rates as much as a quarter point the next meeting Nov. 15."

But some say they believe Federal Reserve Chair Alan Greenspan was handed authority by the committee last month to act sooner if conditions warrant.

Financial markets reacted calmly to the leading indicators report. But stock prices fell sharply later amid worries of rising inflation and interest rates. The Dow Jones industrial average was down nearly 46 points.

The August advance in the index was nearly across the board as nine of the 11 components showed improvement. Factory orders for consumer goods led the way, followed by slower business delivery times that usually are a sign of rising orders and fewer weekly initial claims for unemployment insurance.

Also advancing were stock prices, raw material prices, consumer expectations, the average work week, business orders for plant and equipment and building permits.

The only negatives were a lower money supply and fewer unfilled orders for durable goods.

The economic expansion is well into its fourth year and apparently has weathed the string of interest-rate increases that pushed the rate banks charge each other for overnight loans from 3 percent to 4.75 percent.

The Fed also has raised the discount rate it charges banks to 4 percent.

Banks have responded by raising their prime lending rate for their best customers to 7.75 percent.

"The brakes are being applied. But the brakes haven't been applied in the vehicle in slow down-very much," said Lynn Reaser of First Interstate Bancorp of Los Angeles.

The Index of Leading Economic Indicators is aimed at predicting activity at least six months in advance.

Haitian coup leader Francois abandons struggle

By DAVID BEARD
Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE
Police chief Michel Francois sneaked out of Haiti in the dark Tuesday, the first coup leader to abandon the struggle against American soldiers who poured into Haiti to install a democratic government.

Several hours later, a militia leader denounced violence and called off his opposition to the planned return next week of exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide. "No more violence," said Emmanuel Constant, the leader of the pro-army militia FPRH, whose headquarters were taken over by the American soldiers Monday.

Constant told reporters: "I'm asking everyone to put down the stones, to put down the tires and to put down the guns.""No more violence," said Emmanuel Constant, the leader of the pro-army militia FPRH, whose headquarters were taken over by the American soldiers Monday.

Constant told reporters: "I'm asking everyone to put down the stones, to put down the tires and to put down the guns."

Screams of "Murderer! Murderer!" from about 2,000 Haitians who gathered outside the presidential palace punctuated his speech. Americans troops were protecting Constant, whose group directed terror attacks since its formation in August 1993.

Francois, a four-wheel-drive vehicle passed into the neighboring Dominican Republic on Monday — laid out on the ground and handcuffed in front of jeering Haitians — by some of the so-called "pro-Aristide" men here to ensure the exit of the Haitian coup leader.

Border officials in the Dominican Republic said Francois was accompanied by his brother, Evans Francois, a businessman and former Haitian consul to the Dominican Republic, his wife, two other women and three bodyguards.

Francois left behind a resignation letter defending his actions. "It was not for me to juggle with the actions of the country," he wrote, in words broadcast on local radio. "I am proud of myself."

Francois, who as a precinct chief spearheaded the overthrow of Aristide in September 1991, had masterminded squads of "attackers," or army auxiliaries, responsible for many of the thousands of political killings since.

He, army chief Raoul Cedras and army chief-of-staff Philippe Biamy were to leave power by Oct. 15 under a last-minute agreement negotiated with former President Carter that averted a U.S. invasion.

At the United Nations on Tuesday, Aristide told the General Assembly he would be back in Haiti by that deadline. "Eleven days from now, I shall be there, thanks to the determination of the Haitian people and our solidarity," Aristide said to cheers.

The United States, with thousands of troops in Haiti to help restore the elected government, is seeking the peaceful departure of all three military leaders. "It became very clear that there is a new sheriff in town," U.S. Embassy spokesman Schaeffer said. "When we heard privately announcing Francois' departure, "We fully anticipate the departure of Gen. Cedras and Gen. Biamy in the near future."

The news of Francois' departure intensified efforts to end the conflict, a leader told the Associated Press. "We are celebrating the return of the President," said a leader told the Associated Press.

On Monday, U.S. soldiers struck a major blow to the regime's support base by raiding the headquarters of a leading pro-army paramilitary group, seizing weapons and arresting anyone who got in their way.

U.S. officials have said privately that they hope to make the military-backed administration of Emile Jean-Juste insignificant by ignoring it. That would also ease the way for Haiti's army leaders to relinquish power to President Jean-Bertrand Aristide by Oct. 15. In a country with few and weak government institutions, there has been little active opposition to the U.S. takeover.

U.S. troops seized power institutions

PORT-AU-PRINCE
Instead of toppling Haiti's military leadership by force, the Americans are making it irrelevant by chopping away at the institutions that provided its power.

Heavily armed U.S. troops guard the National Palace, the Legislative Palace, all the major government ministries and the largest and most influential police stations.

Americans effectively control all civil aviation. Their big military cargo jets dominate the international airport's terminal. Special Forces troops occupy the terminal's offices.

They also have seized the small military airfield, put the army's tanks and other heavy equipment out of operation and taken over government radio and television stations.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher said in a speech Tuesday that the United States is seeking the peaceful departure of all three military leaders, referring to General Raoul Cedras, army chief-of-staff Philippe Biamy and "the man in charge." A U.S. soldier who was shot and wounded by Haitian gunmen Monday is to be flown today to the hospital ship USNS Comfort.

U.S. officials have said privately that they hope to make the military-backed administration of Emile Jean-Juste insignificant by ignoring it. That would also ease the way for Haiti's army leaders to relinquish power to President Jean-Bertrand Aristide by Oct. 15.

In a country with few and weak government institutions, there has been little active opposition to the U.S. takeover.

U.S. troops seized power in Haiti on Monday and set up a national letter defending his actions. "It was not for me to juggle with the actions of the country," he wrote, in words broadcast on local radio. "I am proud of myself."

Francois, who as a precinct chief spearheaded the overthrow of Aristide in September 1991, had masterminded squads of "attackers," or army auxiliaries, responsible for many of the thousands of political killings since.

He, army chief Raoul Cedras and army chief-of-staff Philippe Biamy were to leave power by Oct. 15 under a last-minute agreement negotiated with former President Carter that averted a U.S. invasion.

At the United Nations on Tuesday, Aristide told the General Assembly he would be back in Haiti by that deadline. "Eleven days from now, I shall be there, thanks to the determination of the Haitian people and our solidarity," Aristide said to cheers.

The United States, with thousands of troops in Haiti to help restore the elected government, is seeking the peaceful departure of all three military leaders, referring to General Raoul Cedras, army chief-of-staff Philippe Biamy and "the man in charge."
Why are we the way we are? What color will my daughter’s eyes be? Where do we, do I, reside to one single, beautiful equation. One connections between them and other sights, sounds and sights and smells around us and the centrality in the grand scheme of things to being way of thinking. We went from claiming centrality in the grand scheme of things to being the center of our own galaxy, it was a tremendous blow to our pride, as well as our way of thinking. We went from claiming centrality in the grand scheme of things to being a tiny speck of imperfection in an infinite and continually expanding universe. Maybe it was then that we became desperate to discover exactly where we are in this infinite landscape. We’ve never looked back.

Yet, that’s precisely what we did do, look back. Scientists began to look back into the earliest days of the universe. They’ve gone all the way back to the last 10-43 second. Now they’re sorted... stuck. They reached a point where they have a cause without an effect. They are able to admit that perhaps the simplification toward which they are striving is not that simple, or beautiful. Because life isn’t always beautiful.

Let’s consider for a moment that maybe we’re not supposed to know. Maybe we’re always meant to wonder what happened in the first few microseconds of a second of the universe’s existence. Do you want to know what you’re getting for Christmas, exactly what tomorrow will bring, when you’re going to die? No one wants to see a movie when they already know the ending. Some things are better left unknown, lest the joy of their discovery be taken away.

There are some things we’ll never know the answers to. True enlightenment comes when we begin to look for the questions. You may never find the answer, but you will learn a lot about yourself along the way.

Personally, I’d like to think that I exist in this ever expanding, tumultuously changing universe for a purpose. Perhaps I have to admit that in the grand scheme of things this purpose may not be so grand in the scheme of things. Yet in my scheme of things it is certainly grand. Because as a good friend of mine often says, life is grand.

So why is life grand? Since I’m asking the questions here I’ll answer them too. Life is grand because we never know what lurks around the corner. I don’t really want to know exactly why I’m here or what will happen next, or exactly how nature and the world around me all fit together, because it would tarnish the wonderful luster that not knowing these things lends to life.

I don’t think I want the equation that tells me how life fits together, where the ducks go when it rains, or why nobody likes the black jelly beans. It just wouldn’t be as much fun. If I knew exactly where I fit in, there wouldn’t be anything left to wonder about.

There wouldn’t be any questions left to ask.

We could come to a better understanding of the universe, the origin of the galaxy and of the human species. So far they have come pretty close. The question is do the nature of the universe, the origin of the universe of ours for a purpose. Perhaps I

A liberal education means taking responsibility for it

Dear Editor:

What is a liberal education? If you posed this question to Notre Dame students, how many could muster a coherent answer? Many of us enter Notre Dame hoping, that after four years, we will leave as liberal educated individuals. We therefore have a responsibility to offer insightful responses to this fundamental question.

Before attributing the degradation of the liberal education to uninspiring professors ("I'm boring liberal education," September 28, 1994), students must claim partial responsibility for its apparent failure. In her column, Megan Smith claims that liberal education is the discovery of "what personal knowledge can be pieced together through contact with diverse studies." But it is more than this; the liberal education teaches us how to think by strictly discouraging the mind. The University is not obligated to give us anything in terms of education. It is responsible for providing an environment conducive to intellectual and spiritual exploration.

We must stop denying or at least ignoring the plain truth: we are responsible for our own education. Despite our valiant attempt to deny and/or mitigate the harshness of reality, the intellectual freedom allowed by "contact with diverse studies" cannot be divorced from responsibility. This denial manifests itself in the popular yet insidious dichotomy between the lecture hall and the residence hall—the classroom and our real lives. There exists a dangerous tendency around campus to believe that learning occurs exclusively in the classroom. Any honest professor would respond by saying that knowledge is earned by thoughtful engagement of a text outside of class. A meaningful classroom conversation, based upon careful study and meditation upon a text by professor and student, functions as a point of real life intersection, not departure. So before bemoaning the miserable state of the liberal education, we must ask ourselves if we are living up to our end of the bargain.

Indigo Girls bring their acoustic melodies to ND

By ROB ADAMS
Music Critic

The Indigo Girls will be taking their traveling circus of sounds to Stepan Center tonight. It will be the second time in their storied career that they will have visited the Notre Dame second time in their storied career that they have visited the Notre Dame Campus.

Formed in 1985, the Indigo Girls three years, one single, and one full-length album, before the signed with Epic Records. Since then it has been a busy six years as they steadily climbed the ranks of folk musicians.

Even though they are now recognized as one of the premier folk acts, Emily S Tailors and Amy Ray still treat their songcrafting as an art, respecting the medium that has taken them so far. "It is just saying that we have to respect the way things are moving, even if we do not understand some times. Maybe there is something bigger than yourself than it is about being a part of."

The Indigo Girls are famous for their wonderfully intimate live performances, and are also greatly enhanced by all of their touring. They will bring energy to this campus with their powerful lyrics and impressive vocals," says Carrie Scanlon, a Farley Hall junior, "plus, they are just cool."

Ryan Duncan, an Alumni Hall junior, agrees. "It should prove to be an enjoyable show," he says, "and the ticket sales have already proved that it will be a successful one."

There are still tickets available for tonight's show. These available tickets will go on sale when the doors open at 7:00 p.m. The show is set to begin at 8:00 p.m.

Band de Soleil's debut C.D. exhibits new rock focus

By ROB ADAMS
Music Critic

Although The Indigo Girls are the band that everyone wants to see tomorrow night, two opening acts will also be providing entertainment: Band de Soleil and Janet McGlaughlin. Band de Soleil's formation in June of 1993 took place in Atlanta ending the somewhat successful solo career of Michelle Malone, who had previously released three solo albums by the age of 26. These days, however, she is joined by Danny Bigay on drums and Mike Snowden on bass leaving her earlier acoustic stuff behind and focusing more on improving her guitar expertise and writing some hard-edged rock-n-roll.

Malone, singer, songwriter, and guitar, is the driving force behind the band's debut, Redemption Dream. "When does the nightmare stop? When does the dream begin," asks a desperate Malone on the title track. Funky wah-wah pedal rhythm begins "Redemption Dream," the track title also the opening song of the album, leading into the powerful vocals of Malone -- searching through a Southern fried rock extravaganza.

"Gathering" is a soft, soulful ballad concerning, ironically enough with such a subtle beat, a call for everyone, regardless of race, class or creed, to come together and partner with them. Quick pickings on an acoustic guitar are smoothed out over the laid-back drum arrangement.

A psychedelic keyboard introduction opens the song "Hollow Day." The drama is heightened as the end-of-the-road guitar riffs surface and the cymbals rise and eventually lead to Malone. Her sultry voice completely makes the song an extremely worthwhile listening experience.

Band de Soleil is one band that will definitely sound exciting live. Their thick riffs and traditional rock arrangements will only serve to challenge Malone and her wonderful vocals. More than likely, she will handle the task with fluid consistency, proven by her successful past experience.
Howard guarantees Illinois victory

By RUSTY MILLER
Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio Ohio State coach John Cooper was less than straight-up when he said, that some day, the words of Illinois line-backer Dana Howard would appear in the bulletin board in the 17th

Recruits

Bell balked at Kansas, one of the most successful programs in the country in recent years and Gottlieb said no to UCLA where he could have played in front of mom and dad every night.

It's a top 20 recruiting class according to most people who are good guage for the talents tbo possibly in the top 10 among the early-signing players. The question is which nucleus that could make Notre Dame a future basketball power.

Each brings a unique brand of basketball.

Bell is a 6-7, 300-pound body in the mold, if not the manner, of Charles Barkley. Gottlieb is billed as the best point guard on the west coast, a guard a la Bobby Knight. Wische's coach called the shooting guard "the Scottie ranked Buckeyes' locker room.

Howard, the Big Ten's leading scorer and rebounder, guaranteed Monday during a conference call that Illinois would come into Ohio State and win.

"It's going to take a special effort," Howard said, "but we expect to win it tomorrow and we want to win it the right way.

But comparisons, particularized to Keith Tower, are unfair to players with a full season and high school competition ahead.

That's what's certain is Notre Dame basketball has once again shown itself a recruiting trail, inspiring renewed optimism in a pro­gram that had fallen off the map.

Aside from Bell, who committed before the Irish joined the Big East, each of the prospects admitted that the new confer­ence affiliation, at least in part, explains their decision.

Welcome to the Big East, Notre Dame.

And welcome back to the world of big-time college ba­sketball.

He was "disappointed" in Howard's prediction, while Cooper said his players are counseled to not make brash statements about opponents.

"We try to spend as much time as we can, or a consider­able amount of time, with our players in the pressure trying to school them on how to ad­dress the press and how to in­

The defense has naturally become the teams strong suit. Making the move to five mid­fielders. Pointing out the reason is the season did not come nearly as far as the other football team.

Fossett was beginning to make the guarantee. Howard added, "Hey, if you want to tell them that, you can tell them that, I'm not going to say any statement. That's the way it feel.

It might be locker room material or whatever, but we'll win this weekend." (CQ)

Cooper said he wasn't sure if he would clip Howard's words and put them up in the locker room. He said it might not be possible.

"Our players down here have obviously heard about it," he said.

There is no other option to guarantee much based on a statement like this, not even to the nation in defense, lost at home to Purdue 22-16. Ohio State (4-1-6) was shut out 9-0 in the first half at Northwestern and had to turn away a fourth­ quarter two-point conversion attempt to preserve a 17-15 victory.

The Buckeyes had beaten Northwestern the last 18 meet­ings, an average of about 45-10.

"It might have been an ugly victory," Howard said on Sunday. Cooper said, "I've been coaching long enough to realize that you take 'em any way you can get 'em. We dodged a bullet, but we still won the ballgame."

NCAA coaches address sportsmanship

By JIM O'CONNELL
Associated Press

HOUSTON
The National Association of Basketball Coaches started the discussion about sportsmanship long before its issues summit began Tuesday.

The organization's publication, "Courtside," had a full-page color cover photo of two coaches shaking hands with the headline: "Sportsmanship. A quest to restore college basketball's good name."

The headline was brought up a few times in the 90-minute session on sportsmanship and ethical conduct.

"I have a problem with the headline on our publication," Air Force coach Reggie Minton said. "It should say retain not restore our sport's good name."

Taunting, fighting and crowd conduct and control all were brought up and discussed, but Minton was the speaker who summed it up for the coaches and administrators in attendance.

"Everybody better understand sportsmanship is part of your job, no one else's," he said. "It is common sense, good taste, bench decorum, all those things. You must demand, expect and set certain goals and take nothing less just as you would on the court."

The issues summit was the second held by the NABC and the first attended by its black members as the Black Coaches Association called for a boycott of the inaugural meeting in Charlotte, N.C. The leadership of the BCA met instead with the Black Congressional Caucus to voice displeasure over the loss of a scholarship and academic entrance requirements based on standardized test scores.

Initial eligibility will be a session topic Wednesday and it's expected to be well-attended and heated.

"We will have a written position on initial eligibility," NABC executive director Jim Haney said. "It's a subject that the organization feels strongly about."

Missing from the discussion on sportsmanship was any mention on coach vs. coach behavior. It seemed logical it would come up following a season that saw a number of confrontations between coaches repeated over and over again on highlight shows.

"I was surprised it didn't come up and I was surprised the role of officials wasn't addressed," Haney said. "This is a topic that has so much gray area. I was waiting for an administrator to bring up the subject of coaches but it never did. We will go back and draft a game management manual with recommendations in these areas."

"I could have spent my summer on the beach, but I decided it would be better spent in the field."

"There's no substitute for real experience. At least, that's my opinion. And it's obviously the opinion at Ernst & Young. My name is Craig Hallenbeck, and I've just completed what I can honestly say is one of the most satisfying and growing experiences of my life: A summer internship at Ernst & Young Chicago.

It lasted only three months, but in that short time, I gained more technical know-how and business savvy than I ever could in a classroom. But that's only part of it. The opportunity to work side by side, out in the field, with E&Y professionals, and to deal directly with clients from several large companies, instilled in me the feeling that I belong here; that this is exactly what I want to do. It's something I was never completely sure of until I arrived here.

At every turn I felt as if my opinion counted for something. Everyone I met encouraged me to learn as much as I could, to take the initiative in finding original solutions to problems that I hadn't known existed. From working on audits for manufacturing firms to researching the casino industry for Special Services, I discovered that no solution is a hundred percent infallible. Every person at E&Y continuously strives to find one better. This 'find a better way' attitude seems to permeate even the most personal aspects of the firm. Special arrangements and flex schedules for employees are commonplace. The people at E&Y work very hard. But it's understood that each of them has a life outside the office. Adjustments more for personal needs are viewed as a resource, not a liability. How many firms have the vision to realize this, and more importantly, act on it?

I guess you can tell I'm impressed. Everything I saw had a positive effect on me. And if I had to make the choice all over again, rest assured, my sunscreen would stay exactly where it's been all summer. Sitting comfortably in my cabinet at home.

Despite Hawkeye woes, Fry optimistic

By GREG SMITH
Associated Press

IOWA CITY, Iowa

Anyone thinking Iowa football coach Hayden Fry would be gloomy after the Hawkeyes' third straight loss last weekend should have been at Tuesday's news conference.

He's not exactly a threat to David Letterman, but Fry was in an uncommonly jovial mood as he poked fun at columnists, beat reporters, players — even his choice of ties.

"I had to borrow one of Philip's ties this morning," he said, referring to sports information director Phil Haddy. "It got flowers on it. I wanted a daisy; forgot my earring," Fry said.

A reporter asked him about Saturday's contest against the Hoosiers of Indiana. "Hooters?" Fry said.

Well, then, what about Bobby Diaco, the team's leading tackler who has had to play nearly every down because the Hawkeyes are thin at linebacker?

"He's got Italian blood lines. Every time I walk in the locker room I look to see if he's got his violin case or not," the coach said.

Don't feel bad, Bobby. Michigan running back Tim Biakabutuka got the same treatment when Fry referred to him as, "that Irishman, you can't pronounce his name."

When Fry moved on to the subject of football, one topic was considerably less funny: defense.

Although the Hawkeyes' pass defense is fourth in the Big Ten, its rushing defense is last, allowing 217.6 yards per game.

What's worse is Iowa defenders are second-to-last in the conference in turnover margins, ahead of only Minnesota.

In five games, Iowa has seven takeaways, including five fumbles and two interceptions. The top team, Michigan, has 13 turnovers.

"We've got to start getting more turnovers on defense. This is the worst team I've had defensively as far as getting turnovers," Fry said. "We're not creating them.

"We're fighting for our lives trying to survive rather than knocking the ball loose. We haven't gotten around to coaching knocking the ball loose yet. We're still trying to teach them how to tackle."

The Hawkeyes also have given up the ball 13 times, six on fumbles and seven interceptions by quarterback Ryan Driscoll.

"Frankly, we've stopped ourselves as much as anybody," Fry said. "If we don't quit making critical turnovers and penalties, we're not going to win."

Turnovers and penalties — Iowa is the most penalized team in the Big Ten with 41 — have led to losses to Penn State, Oregon and Michigan after opening the year with victories over Central Michigan and Iowa State.

Injuries forced Fry into starting three new defensive players in last week's loss to Michigan.

Belles dumped in five games

By CHRISTINA TECSON

Saint Mary's volleyball team played a tough game against Hope College last night in Angola Athletic Facility. The Belles competitive spirit lasted until the end as they lost in the fifth game of a very intense match.

Coming in with a 14-5 record, Hope beat Saint Mary's in the first game 15-5, and in the third 15-7. But the Belles strong sense of compusure enabled them to rebound and answer with a win in the second game 15-12 and again in the fourth 15-12. This match was brought to the final game where Hope edged Saint Mary's by one point.

Meg Kelly led the team in kills with 14 and Sarah Stroncsek followed with 13. Betsy Connolly finished with 10 kills, Ann Lawrence with 8 kills on the night and Kelly Prosser had seven. Leading in blocking were Stroncsek with 7, Pronser and Connolly each with 4 and Lawrence with 3.

This loss brings Saint Mary's to a 7-6 record but the team will agree that, despite the score, the game was not a total loss.

"I think it was the best match we've played," said freshman Kelly Meyer. "The talent level was pretty even so it was a toss up as to who would win." The experience on the other side of the court kept the Belles challenged but playing their best.

"That's the best we've played so far," Saint Mary's coach Julie Schroeder-Biek said. "That's the most we've been challenged."

Hope was also a much improved team since last year as she pointed out.

"I recognized a lot of their faces and know that they're much more experienced than we are," she said.

"This was very encouraging for us to play this tough. Even though this was a loss I think it will carry our spirits into the tournament this weekend," she said, inviting all to "Come and support us."
Miami's Sapp will be key against FSU

By STEVEN WINE
Associated Press

CORAL GABLES, Fla. — Warren Sapp says Florida State never had a chance against the Miami Hurricanes.

The junior defensive tackle and Outland Trophy contender was once a top prep prospect. He chose Miami and hopes to make both schools rue their decision Saturday when the two teams meet in the Orange Bowl.

Sapp grew up in Plymouth, an unincorporated town near Orlando. He awoke Monday with just one restaurant and 3,200 residents. He made a recruiting trip to Tallahassee, then eliminated it from contention.

"I didn't like it at all," Sapp said Tuesday. "I'm from a small town, so I didn't want to go to a small town. That's like being at home."

"I'm an 'orange-and-green man, not a garnet-and-gold. I don't like a spear on my hel­met. I like that. I'd like sunny weather. It's cold up there in Tallahassee. I don't like any­thing about it. They have to go to Tallahassee to like it."

While Sapp might be guilty of unintentional cruelty, particularly concerning Tallahassee's weather, Florida State coach Bobby Bowden has only good things to say about the Hurricanes' star.

"When you look at the University of Miami, the first guy that catches your attention is No. 76," Bowden said. "He definitely belongs in the honor roll of the many great defensive linemen they've had. He might be better than all of them."

Miami defensive tackles in the past decade included Russell Maryland, Cortez Kennedy and the late Jerome Brown, each a first-round draft pick in the NFL.

"Sweet, fast and overpowering at 6-foot-3 and 284 pounds, is just as dominant as his prede­cessors. This season he has 29 tackles, three sacks, one fumble forced and two fumbles re­covered for the Hibachi­flavored Miami."

"He's kind of a starting point of our defense," Bowden said. "He's the guy that can intimi­date, the guy that can destroy, the guy that can ruin a game plan. You'd better block him."

Sapp has been double-teamed most of season and invites the same challenge against Florida State, because he knows it would mean one less blocker for his teammates to deal with.

"You go right ahead and double­team me," Sapp said. "I've got­ten pretty accustomed to going one on one. I know how to out of it."

But while Sapp sounds con­fident and slams the Seminoles, he respects them. The Miami-Florida State game is always circled on his calendar.

The start may have been a little been shaky, but from that on everything else was smooth

This was the case last had to fumble the snap, but

After that, there would be no more miscues as the Attitudes

Lyons (2-1) at Carver Field.

"The first play didn't go to Simonic was starting her first game, as the junior varsity freshman Marie Bashagull suffered against Pangborn.

Bashagull fractured her knee and is expected to return in next week's game against Walsh.
In the meantime, Simonic will try to lead the Attitudes to an upset victory over No. 3 Lyons.

"It's going to be a real

The Indigo Girls have arrived

Irish break out tradition as program rebuilds

Irish coaches at Notre Dame have always been known for their innovative approaches to the game. This year, they've taken things a step further by introducing a new tradition known as Midnight Madness. The event takes place on November 9th, featuring a variety of activities designed to energize the fans and get them ready for the upcoming season.

When the clock strikes 12 next Friday night, it will be the birth not only of a new day, but of a new season for the Notre Dame men's basketball program. NCAA rules allow college teams to assemble for the first time on October 15. Notre Dame can't afford to waste a minute. And they're inviting the world to watch their initial workout.

Midnight Madness is a tradition at many basketball-crazed schools, attracting thousands of fans starving for their first taste of hoops. It never really caught on at Notre Dame, where basketball has never been more than football's underachieving little brother. Not so long ago, Midnight Madness referred to coach John MacLeod's nocturnal fury when watching film of his team's play.

Now it's a full-fledged Irish break out tradition as program rebuilds basketball event, the inauguration of Notre Dame's last season as an independent. The announcement last summer that Notre Dame would join the Big East Conference beginning in the 1995-96 season sparked renewed interest in the men's basketball program. Just how much interest will begin to be revealed late next Friday night.
