Students hear views of gang life

Only gang members themselves can prevent gang violence from hurting the youth, according to Darryl, a gang member from the Cabrini Green housing project in Chicago.

Darryl was one of five young men who, along with Brother Bill Tomes and Brother Jim Fogarty of the Brothers and Sisters of Love, spoke to Notre Dame students on Saturday about gang violence.

"You only learn from your mistakes," Darryl said. "Instead of grabbing our guns, we have to be the ones to stop the violence for the kids."

According to Fogarty, steps have been taken towards achieving peace among gangs. Following the accidental shooting of a second-grader several years ago, a peace treaty was formed between the Bishops and Disciples, two conflicting gangs in the Chicago area.

The treaty only lasted several months in most areas, but it has remained intact in Cabrini Green, significantly decreasing the amount of gang violence.

In other areas, however, gang violence is inescapable. Jason, the only speaker not in a gang, claimed that in DeHaven Homes near Chicago, even those not involved in gangs are assumed to be members by other gangs.

"If you tell them you're not in a gang, they're not going to believe you because their minds are corrupted," he said, everywhere. You can't run from it."

Darryl claimed that easy access to guns and a sense of revenge often lead to gang shootings.

"If it hadn't been shot, I never would have picked up a gun," he said, having been shot four times when he was sixteen. "It's fun to shoot, but it's not fun to get shot."

Tomes and Fogarty explained that as missionaries of the Brothers and Sisters of Love, they work throughout the housing projects of Chicago trying to bring God's love into the lives of those affected by and involved in gang violence.

Tomes claimed that those who come in contact with are closer to God when they believe they don't know if tomorrow they're going to be here or not.

Despite their mission of peace, the Brothers and Sisters are subject to the random shootings that often break out. Tomes himself has dodged twenty-eight near-hits while walking the streets.

"Learning to Defend Yourself Against Violent Attack," will be presented by nationally-renowned self-defense expert Debbi Gardner tonight from 6-9 pm in O'Laughlin Auditorium.

Gardner is one of several women who will be featured January 23-24 in the first annual Saint Mary's Women's Week, according to Meenagh Peters, vice-president for Student Affairs.

"There is a special activity planned for each day this week which will focus on current women's issues," Peters said.

Also tonight Saint Mary's alumna Janet Hunter will present a lecture entitled "Psyching Up for the World of Work," beginning at 7 pm in the Little Theatre. A reception will follow.

Later in the week, the Sisters of the Holy Cross, the Center for Spirituality, and the Center for Academic Innovation are sponsoring a discussion on women seekers Tuesday in Stapleton Lounge from 7 to 9:15 pm. Women seeking from the Lilly Fellows Program will be leading the discussion, according to Peters.

Wednesday, students are invited to attend a Brown Bag Lunch with Phyllis Kamiński, assistant professor of religious studies, from noon to 1 pm in Haggar Parlor. "Marxism and Women's Bodies: Feminist Theory and Theology" will be Kamiński's lecture topic. Students should bring their own lunch.

"Students are encouraged to attend a benefit for theYWCA Women's Shelter on January 25 (Wednesday) in the Angela Athletic Facility at 8 pm," Peters said.

Vandiver: Battle also fought away from cities

By PIERRE MACGILLIS
News Writer

A crucial portion of the emerging awareness of racial equality was accomplished on a smaller scale, far away from metropolitan America, said Beverly Vandiver, a staff psychologist in the University Counseling Center, last Friday.

At a luncheon sponsored by the Center for Social Concerns, Vandiver spoke about "Growing up in a Family Committed to the Civil Rights Movement," sharing her childhood memories of growing up in rural Kentucky, away from the more famous battle lines of the civil rights movement.

Vandiver credits her mother and father for giving her the drive to escape the restraints imposed upon her way of life.

"Their parents, despite only having eight-grade educations, strongly encouraged their children to pursue higher education, and were also unusually interested in current events. "They were newsfreaks, and at times subscribed to three newspapers and two newsmagazines at the same time," she said.

This zeal for political and cultural awareness was extended into energetic activism, such as editorial writing and schoolboard politics, Vandiver said.

"My childhood memories of racism and racial division included her attendance at a "colored" grade school, which combined eight grades into one classroom.

"Shes also remembered that the great majority of blacks worked for whites and that there were certain situations and places where this would avoid for fear of harsh treatment.

Her sister was one of the first African-Americans to enter a former all-white community high school after the Supreme Court mandated desegregation in the case "Brown vs. Board of Education." However, eight years passed after the ruling until the local high school was, in fact, desegregated.

"The economic structure in place also stifled the frank and liberal activism that her parents exhibited, according to Vandiver. "The fearful questioning of authority, when justifiable, is a necessary component of progress," she said.

" Residents are encouraged to attend a benefit for theYWCA Women's Shelter on January 25 (Wednesday) in the Angela Athletic Facility at 8 pm," Peters said.

A preliminary hearing concerning the trial of Notre Dame law school graduate John Rita on a charge of leaving the scene of a fatal accident was postponed Friday until February 5.

St. Joseph's County Prosecutor Michael Barnes said he asked for the postponement so that he might have time to question a witness that Rita's defense attorney, Charles Amick, planned to have testify at the hearing.

Rita, 25, of Springfield, Virginia, was acquitted by a jury in November of a charge of driving drunk and causing the death of Maria Fox as she walked along Douglas Road in the early hours of November 13, 1993.

Rita was an eighteen-year-old Notre Dame freshman at the time of the accident. Rita was a three-year-law student who went on to graduate with honors in May 1994.

At his first trial Rita also faced the charge of leaving the scene of a fatal accident. After nearly nine hours of deliberations the jury could not reach a verdict, and St. Joseph's County Superior Court Judge William Albright declared a mistrial.

Barnes announced January 4 that he intended to retry Rita.
MTV... A Waste of a Great Idea

BEVERLY HILLS

The quirky Tom Hanks box, office smash "Forrest Gump," tipped Quentin Tarantino's "Pulp Fiction" in the 52nd Golden Globe Awards, often a bellwether for the Oscars.

"Gump," the saga of a very simple country boy, won best dramatic picture; Hanks was best dramatic actor and Robert Zemeckis was best director. "Pulp Fiction," a dark gangster film that some have criticized as too violent, picked up an award for best screenplay, by writer-director Quentin.

The two movies are considered front-runners for best picture at the Academy Awards, presented March 27. The Golden Globes is the first major awards show of the season.

His feel-good film amassed $306.6 million in ticket sales before it was pulled from theaters Friday. Paramount Pictures will re-release it Feb. 17, three days after the Oscar nominations are announced.

"Pulp Fiction" has garnered the majority of critics' awards and grossed $70 million. One surprise was Jessica Lange's best dramatic actress award for her Army wife in "Blue Sky," which had a limited release. Even its stars were "a strange and peculiar little film."

"Forrest Gump" won best for comedic music, while Hugh Grant and Jamie Lee Curtis picked up awards for best comedy performances.

MTV used to be a great idea. When the channel began in 1981, it was an attempt to bring visual music to a frenzied mass of cable-owners, greedy for a deluge of entertainment possibilities. At that time, it was at its most basic; it was taking songs that were popular on radio charts, getting songs that were popular on video charts, and rehashing the same music you would have heard on your local rock-n-roll station. Yet watching MTV became a novelty, appealing to an audience the size of which programmers had probably only dreamed of, and eventually represented a chunk of the 80’s and its over-excessiveness. This popularity led to a demise in creativity over their 14-year history.

As MTV grew throughout the 80’s, so did its prosperity for experimentation. In 1985, the first MTV Video Awards were given out, and the show became known as the gauge for who made the best videos of the previous year. In 1986, the alternative rock show "The Video Music Awards" began, where who were a bit turned off by the mainstream a chance to watch videos by bands that they loved. "You MTV Raps" debuted in 1988, as MTV realized there was rap music beyond Run DMC and the Beastie Boys. A game show surface, new hit VJ’s scooted in and out as MTV made its way to weekly contracts, and video countdown shows became common place.

All of these and many other experiments worked magically. The channel reached extended populations of viewers and began to feed on it. MTV was watched at all hours and no one day of the week was much better than any other. Advertising began as MTV centered on the young and carefree viewing audience. As the nineties began, some of the time for current events was pushed into the making of that list aided by a wave of new Billboard charts, including rap and modern rock.

MTV was the first time, hand selling records solely because of MTV. This is not necessarily bad. Many performers should have been proud that they could have such an impact. The outcome only gratified the artists and made them feel that they were causing a "music revolution."

MTV says that today's time on MTV is very different from the MTV of the late 1980's. How MTV dares to say this is beyond our comprehension. Only fact that too many artists have a particular video of theirs play too much of the time. To suggest that the MTV show completely with those artists would be lunacy; in order to keep viewers, bands need to keep sponsors and stay in business. MTV needs to play videos by artists like Aerosmith, TLC, and Sheryl Crow while actualizing how quickly repetitiveness makes things stale.

MTV should take some time to grow again. Not necessarily to invent new shows or formats, but the easiest kind of experimentation possible is simply more videos by obscure artists. If MTV wants to be a channel of revolution, then they should act that way, utilizing the immense freedom they have. To continually playing the role of cowardly bandwidthers, MTV will only have an audience, but it will not open their minds to new music.

French bishop dismissed by Vatican

EVELVAX, France

A bishop dismissed by the Vatican for his disissident views and maverick style during the final months of his tenure Sunday with a promise to continue both his religious work and his activism. About 8,000 supporters gathered in the rain outside this town's cathedral, about 50 miles northwest of Paris, to listen to Bishop Jacques Gaillot's homily over loudspeakers. Roughly 1,000 others filled the church, including four French bishops, liberal activist leaders and the Communist mayor of Evreux. Gaillot thanked supporters for their love and pledged to continue his work "in communion with the church to bring the good word to the world."

The church must be the church of the excluded and not of exclusion," he said. The Vatican, after years of annoyance at Gaillot's high-profile challenges to church positions, dismissed him Jan. 13 as bishop of the diocese of Evreux. He remains a priest.

Five Notre Dame freshmen have been named National Advanced Placement Scholars by the College Board.

To qualify for the award, students must score at least a four on a five-point scale on eight Advanced Placement (AP) examinations in high school.

Notre Dame's Advanced Placement Scholars are Kristin Johnson, in history; Devon Stewart, in English; and Michael Hardgrove, in mathematics. They were among just 6,155 students nationwide to earn this honor in 1994.

The AP exams give students the opportunity to earn college credit while still enrolled in high school. Exam scores of 3, 4, or 5 are accepted by more than 2,900 institutions for advanced placement in college courses, according to the Board.

Notre Dame's AP policy normally requires a minimum score of 4 for credit, according to a University press release.

"All recipients of this are well prepared for college because they have already completed the equivalent of two years of college study," said Donald Stewart, president of the Board.

GM workers vote on deal to end strike

By MIKE MCKESSON
Associated Press

Workers at a crucial General Motors parts complex overwhelmingly ratified a deal Sunday to end a four-day strike that forced shutdowns at other GM plants in the United States and Canada.

The agreement included a GM commitment to hire more than 600 additional workers by mid-1996, and add new products to the complex's output, the United Auto Workers said.

"They were trying to take a lot of your jobs to Mexico ... and we stopped them," UAW negotiator Scott Campbell told cheering workers.

GM spokesman Dan Donlan confirmed that several hundred new workers will be hired and that the company will invest in new products. However, he said he will not confirm the specific details released by the union.

GM said it expected to resume parts production during the night and reopen the idled assembly plants on Monday.

The 6,800 members of UAW Local 651 went on strike Wednesday at the AC Delco Flint East complex, two factories that make a variety of parts used in many GM cars and trucks.

As the flow of parts stopped, the company was forced to close all or parts of at least 10 assembly plants. That idled more than 30,000 other workers and suspended production of some of GM's most profitable vehicles, including full-size pickup trucks and sport-utility vehicles.

Local 651 president Dale LeBeau said 96 percent of the members voting favored the agreement. Vote totals were not released.

The union had complained that understaffing and overtime was creating dangerous and unhealthy working conditions. The union also said GM broke an agreement to hire new employees to ease the burden.

The union said the deal includes a company commitment to spend more than $72 million on new product programs at the complex through 1998.

"It's a real good deal," said Willie Polk, who has worked at the complex 25 years. "If they don't abide by what they agreed with, we'll walk again." Most of the new workers would be added by the end of the year. GM First will try to give jobs to workers laid off from its plants at other locations, then hire entirely new employees.

Double bombing kills 19, rescuers also targeted

By DIANNA CAHN
Associated Press

BEIT LID JUNCTION, Israel
A suicide mission by Islamic militants near a snack bar mobbed with soldiers killed 19 Israelis and wounded about 60 Sunday with a gruesome new tactic — igniting a small blast and ambushing would-be rescuers with a second major explosion.

The result was a hammer blow to the Israel-PLO peace treaty, already reeling from an unprecedented series of attacks inside Israel.

President Yitzhak Rabin convened an emergency Cabinet session Sunday evening to determine the government's response.

The first step was a complete closure of the occupied territories, blocking the movement of all Palestinians into Israel. It has been the response after each similar attack and has kept tens of thousands of Palestinians away from jobs in Israel.

The Cabinet also froze any future release of Palestinian prisoners and the opening of a passage between the PLO-ruled areas of Jericho and Gaza.

Rabin underscored the deepening concern about such carnage by making his first personal inspection tour of a suicide bombing site.

"There is no doubt in my mind that this action now is another attempt by the extreme Islamic terrorist groups to achieve their dual goal of killing Israelis and halting the peace process," he said.

Hecklers at the scene shouted, "How much longer?" while Rabin toured the devastated site surrounded by jittery bodyguards.

Hundreds of Israelis demonstrated in Jerusalem and at the site of the bombing to protest the attack, shouting "Death to Arabs." About 100 police on horseback used water cannons to disperse about 200 demonstrators at a shopping mall near the blast site.

"The peace process is a murder process," said U.S.-born Jack Schwartz.

The radical Islamic Jihad organization issued leaflets in both Gaza and in Damascus, Syria, claiming responsibility for the double-barreled suicide mission.

The Gaza statement said the attack was to avenge the death of Yahi Abu D, a leader of the military wing whose death was blamed on Israel, and the killing of three Palestinian police shot by Israeli troops earlier this month.

An Islamic Jihad leader said the attack was also to protest Israeli settlements in the West Bank.

"This operation is the genuine retort to the continuous daily expansion of the enemy's settling process in the West Bank and Jerusalem," Fathi Shikaki, secretary-general of the group, said in an interview with Al-Nour radio in Beirut, Lebanon.

The two suicide attackers were identified as Salah Shaker, 25, from Rafah and Aswar Sukar, 23, from Gaza City, whose fate was sealed by the Palestinians themselves.

Outside Sukar's house, Islamic activists chanted "Death to America and Israel" and said the bomber would be rewarded in paradise. Clearly distraught relatives cried, spot on the Islamic Jihad members and cursed them as "dogs." One threw a flower pot that narrowly missed people in the crowd.

Sukar had been detained briefly by the Palestinian police after the Nov. 11 bicycle bombing by a Islamic Jihad suicide bomber who killed three Israeli officers.

The brunt of the explosion was taken by a single army company, one of a special unit deployed to guard bus stops, especially on Sundays when they are crowded with troops returning from weekend furloughs. Eighteen of the dead were soldiers.

Kit bags, jackets and the red berets of the elite paratrooper unit, many of them blood-stained, lay scattered among the broken glass and other debris near the blast site.

Victims were groaning and calling for help. Religious medical teams combed the ground and the trees for scattered bits of flesh. Since Jewish law requires all body parts to be buried.

"It was a huge explosion. We came outside and saw everything was charred. As I moved toward the snack bar, I saw body parts, hands, arms, a God-awful scene," said eyewitness Haim Hershkovitz.

Bella Zion, 42, who owns the snack shop, was inside with her husband and son and at first thought she had been caught to the floor by an electric shock.

"By the time I was able to get up there was another explosion. Again, the entire roof collapsed and the solar panels fell on me," she said from her hospital bed.

The blasts occurred across the street from Ashmore Hotel, 25 meters away from the site of the first explosion.

Yassin, the spiritual leader of Hamas, has been serving a life sentence since 1989 for ordering the killing of Israeli informants and other activities against the occupation.

Officials said the two explosions were among hundreds in a 24-hour span.

Survivors reported a man wearing a uniform doubled over as if to throw up who they believe exploded the first bomb outside the snack bar. When soldiers rushed to see what happened, the second bomb exploded. The tract was unseen in Israel before.

The bombs are believed conspired by a fugitive Palestinian chemist and Hamas member named Yehia Ayash, nicknamed "The Engineer." He is believed to have built the bombs in a number of smaller, suicide attacks, including one in Tel Aviv in October that killed 22 people.

PLF leader Yasser Arafat's aides said he phoned Rabin to condemn the attack and express his condolences.

Survivors struggle in wake of quake

By DAVID THURBER

KOBE, Japan

Signs of psychological stress, frustration, and a breakdown in the social order for which Japanese society is renowned emerged Sunday among the thousands of survivors of Japan's dead-end quake in over seven decades. The death toll neared 5,000.

At the Kansei Rosai Hospital in nearby Amagasaki, doctors said many patients were having difficulty breathing at night — a symptom doctors said is common among those suffering delayed stress syndrome.

"The people think we'll have another big quake," taxi driver Yoshihara Morimoto said. "Most are very afraid another big one will come. Many people are leaving, and many of them have lost their jobs." because businesses were destroyed.

For the first time, merchants are complaining about thefts, and on Sunday many of them organized a neighborhood watch system to guard against nighttime pillaging from their shops.

Five days after the 7.2-magnitude quake, Japanese national police said the death toll had risen to 4,936 with 171 still missing. Nearly 26,000 have been injured.

Doug Copp of the American Rescue Team based in San Francisco said there was a "good possibility" that more survivors could still be found under the rubble.

Frustration over the government's relief operation boiled over into open hostility Sunday during a live, nationally televised hookup between government officials and survivors.

"You should have told us or showed us what we could do in such a bad situation," barked one man, abandoning the bureaucratic style of speech which Japanese ordinarily use in addressing leaders.

A teacher noted that volunteers had gone to Kobe by foot to help survivors. "Why can't officials do the same?" she asked. A high school student told Chief Cabinet Secretary Kozo Igarashi: "I want you guys to do something, not as politicians but as human beings, as soon as possible."

Such public comments are rare in a culture that emphasizes respect for leaders. "We want people to believe us," Igarashi pleaded. "We are doing our best as human beings."

Criticism also came from the political opposition. Former Prime Minister Tsutomi Hata, deputy leader of the New Frontier Party, said in a speech in northern Japan that lives were lost because the government had no plan "to protect public safety and property when a natural calamity like an earthquake occurs."

A strong aftershock shook Kobe overnight. There were no reports of damage or injuries. The aftershock measured 4 on Japan's 7-point intensity scale. Tuesday's devastating quake measured 7 on that scale.

As a sign of the dangers facing this once vibrant port city, three people were trapped Sunday when a quake-damaged building collapsed, blocking the entrance to their home. Rescuers carried them to safety.

Heavy rains fell throughout the day. Helicopters flying in relief supplies were grounded, and the search for 30 people missing in nearby Nishinomiya had to be called off for fear of mud slides.

The chilly rain worsened the already horrific conditions for the nearly 300,000 people left homeless by the quake.

"We're not going to be stopped by bullies," NOW President Patricia Ireland told the audience.

In Washington, D.C., about 50 anti-abortion protesters gathered at the church President Clinton usually attends. Some waved white crosses and signs that read: "Excommunicate the Clintons," and "Repeal, Clinton."

The president avoided the fray by attending a different church. That didn't stop the criticism.

"We're here to ... say, 'Mr. Clinton, your policies are resulting in the deaths of innocent children,'" said Patrick Mahoney, director of the Christian Defense Coalition.

In Los Angeles, Norma McCorvey, the Jane Roe in Roe vs. Wade, held a news conference to decry the recent violence.

Before Roe vs. Wade, "We lost millions of women to back-alley abortions," McCorvey said. "Now they left them to die from bleeding to death, or injured them to the point of leaving them childless forever," she said.

McCorvey, an abortion clinic worker in Dallas, said the violence has prompted many women to cancel appointments.

"I wondered to myself when I take these calls, 'What would happen to the husbands and children of these women if they were to be gunned down for coming in for a regular pap smear or pregnancy test?'" she said.

The call for peace has been growing louder since two receptionists were killed at separate clinics in Brookline, Massachusetts. John C. Salvi III, 23, of Hampton, N.H., has been charged with murder.

The most touching present I received this Christmas was a personalized, first-name invitation from the Executive Vice-President, Father Beauchamp, asking me to be in the Sorin Society, which consists of those who "make an unrestricted gift of $1,000 or more" in the University. Benefits include "annual investment of one thousand dollars, invitation from the Executive Vice-President to an Annual Fiscal Report, an "omnibus" for the President's newsletter, Notre Dame Magazine, and "honorary membership in the University Club." It popped for $3,000, I could join the Society's Founder's Circle and receive also a "quartet of尊贵 articles on Notre Dame, the "Notre Dame: More financial aid means higher tuition at the professional school and graduate levels." On the other hand, the President, Father Kenneth C.oro, has become protestantized and secularized through a rejection of institutional loyalty to the teaching Church. The second time around, an op-ed by David Lipsky on December 29th, explained the origin of the national problem. The federal Guaranteed Student Loan Act of 1965 had strict income limits and by the mid-1970s few students had used it. In 1978, however, largely in response to pressure from universities, President Carter signed the Middle Income Student Assistance Act. That Act removed the income restrictions, so that, as Lipsky says, "A Kennedy kid could qualify for a guaranteed loan almost as easily as a Katzenjammer kid." However, as Fortune magazine warned, "Any institution that makes it easier to pay tuition bills will also make it easier to raise tuition charges." The main beneficiaries of the Act are the universities and the banks: "Although the babyboom generation was very big, the 'baby bust' generation—kids born from about 1964 to 1975—is very small. So colleges, which had expanded, have charged students more money, subsidized by Federal loans. As for banks, student loans are more profitable than home mortgages and car loans. Since the Government is a signer, it must make good on bad loans. Immediately." In 1992 the student loan default rate was 22 percent, twice what it was in 1977. President Clinton's proposal of $10,000 in tuition deductions and similar proposals, incidentally, would enhance the ability of the universities to raise tuition. The 1978 Act coincided with the start of the O'Keefe provost's in which Notre Dame has sought—dignity as a "national Catholic research university" and has more than doubled its tuition, in real dollars, over what it was in 1978. Notre Dame, like other universities, has used the federal loan program as a lever to expand its plant and pursue research greatness while shifting the cost to its students through the exaction of tuition at multiples of the inflation rate. According to an April, 1994 survey, the average graduate of Notre Dame Law School will have between forty and sixty thousand dollars in educational debt. Many law students, to my knowledge, have much more, with some over $100,000. It is a safe assumption that the indebtedness of undergraduates would present a comparable picture on a lower scale. It is immoral for the University to finance its pursuit of research prestige by compelling nonwealthy students to assume heavy loan obligations which deny them genuine freedom in choosing careers and starting families. Notre Dame's unique reputation and "market niche" have so far preserved it from the crisis affecting most universities. But market limits are inexorable. Notre Dame's market niche was built on solid undergraduate education in the "authentic Catholic tradition. If the defaulation of that unique character continues, the market will expose both the loss of our "niche" and the immoral folly of the money-driven race for prestige in which we have engaged for decades. Maybe it was a premonition of these prospects that prompted Father Beauchamp to solicit even people like me to join the Sorin Society. I would like to join. Perhaps I could apply for financial aid to make it possible. Maybe there's even a federal loan program . . .

My family has never had and will never have cable. While many people in my position would have long since taken to heavy drinking and hurling produce at passers-by, I have learned to cope with my deficiency. There are a few entertaining stations that my television receives without cable. The Spanish channel, for instance. My favorite show is "Sabado Gigante." This show has something for everyone! In one evening of "Sabado Gigante" viewing, I can watch comedy, drama, dancing, singing, production destruction ala Gallagher, and plenty of live animals cavorting. The host of "Sabado Gigante" serves as a talk-show host, game-show host, wild animal trainer, and plumber.

We got a few Christian networks, too. One of the stations shows a round-the-clock holiday-athon, but the programming on the other is more varied. One night I was lucky enough to catch "Gospel Jams." Lipper A.K. S.W.I.F.T. (Redemption Will Indeed Feel Terrific) entertained me as he instructed me to "give it up for the B-I-L-E!" I he music sounded suspiciously similar to "Gospel Jams." Unfortunately, "Gospel Jams" soon ended, and after the host, D.O.C. (Disciple Of Christ) doffed his "Absalom" hat and instructed the viewers to give it up for the real G.I., I changed the channel.

I flipped to PBS just in time to catch "The Star Hustler." Everyone has never seen this program is seriously missing out. The Hustler, a portly, aged, squarly gentelman tells the viewers about constellations that will "really knock your socks off." He does a little jog down a path of stars to begin the program, winking all the while. He is accompanied by the theme music which has a Yanni-meets-GreenDay feel while he says things like New York in New York City exhibit on the Denver street where one is most likely to be caught up in his astronomical fervor. The Star Hustler has, in fact, won an award from the National Association of Astronomy—I think it was "Best Hustle of Stars." After the Hustler is done talking about constellations, he jogs down the path of stars in an Inya-meets-Rage Against The Machine melody until his lime-green pantsuit disappears from sight.

I should say that the show is a little heavy-handed about its audience. No one is expected to know much about the stars. In fact, it is quite uncommon. It is the society to today, according to Saint Mary's Public Relations.

DeMarris' art background is extensive. DeMarris received her bachelor of arts and also her master's degrees at Thomas Edison State College in New Jersey. She also studied at the Art Institute of Chicago and the Rhode Island School of Design, according to Saint Mary's Public Relations. Her talent has been recognized in the National Endowment for the Arts Visual Arts Fellowship/Arts Midwest Award.

DeMarris' photographs showcase disillusionsment and expectation. There are scences of adults and children playing reversed roles, which alludes to the role that disillusionsment and expectations play in society today, according to Saint Mary's Public Relations.

Her photographs have also appeared in various publications from New Art Examiner and Arts Indiana to Elle. DeMarris' work can also be found in Bescia, Italy as an exhibit at the Museo Ken Domy Di Fotografia Contemporanea, according to Saint Mary's Public Relations.

COLLEGE BASKETBALL ROUND-UP

PHILADELPHIA

A 17-point lead at halftime seemed like a pretty comfortable cushion until Villanova coach Steve Lappas began considering the possibilities.

"Georgetown is one of the top 10 teams in the country," he said. "We knew our game was good, and we knew it would be a 5-6 point game."

The Hoyas did rally, drawing within two points with 4 minutes to play, but Lappas was right. Villanova hung on for a 66-60 victory Sunday afternoon over No. 10 Georgetown.

It was the second straight Big East loss for Georgetown (12-5, 2-1 Big East), which played without freshman sensation Allen Iverson for all but 10 minutes in the first half.

Iverson, averging 20.3 points, sprained his right ankle in last week's loss to Connecticut. He was limping slightly when he played, but still managed to hand out five assists before Georgetown coach John Thompson took him out for good.

"It was bothering him," Thompson said.

And belief you me...it gets better!

"I think we'd have to put him in this game," Thompson said. "He's been hurt before, that's why we have to worry about him."

Thompson, who said he expects Iverson to be available for Friday's game at Notre Dame, said the Hoyas are in a "tough position."

"It was bothering him," Thompson said.

"We had 12 to 14 assists, and they gave us 16. We had 10 to 12 second-half rally with 13 points. But two points, stayed on the bench."

Fordham guard Kerry Kittles with 1:30 left helped the Wildcats use two runs to build a 38-21 halftime lead. The 21 points was the fewest in a half for Georgetown this season. Ahead 12-11 with 11:25 to play in the half, Villanova went on a 12-0 run in the last three minutes, with Hayes getting five of the points.

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. - Reserve Tony Yang had career highs of 22 points and nine rebounds Sunday, leading third-ranked, unbeaten Maryland to its first conference loss since 1993.

Maryland's Charlotte Smith had 10 points and a game-high 12 rebounds for her ninth double-double. Marion Jones scored 19 points and had a game-high eight assists, while GWendy Gillingham had 10 points and three blocks for No. 24 Tar Heels.

Smith's 1,002 career rebounds made her the fourth Tar Heel woman to top the 1,000 mark.

North Carolina is 18-0 overall and 6-0 in the Atlantic Coast Conference, and has won its last 32 consecutive games over two seasons.

Maryland fell 9-2, 1-5 with its third straight loss to North Carolina.

Freshman Sonia Chese led the Terrapins with 17 points. Freshman Shameka Grant had 15 points and nine rebounds. Ninia Ohman and Karon Ferguson both had 10 for Maryland.

Johnson, a junior, had previous high of 14 points and seven rebounds last year against Rhode Island. Her 14 first-half points led North Carolina to a 47-32 lead at the break.

Three straight baskets by Johnson and a three-pointer by Kerry Kittles with 1:30 left helped the Wildcats use two runs to build a 38-21 halftime lead. The 21 points was the fewest in a half for Georgetown this season. Ahead 12-11 with 11:25 to play in the half, Villanova went on a 12-0 run in the last three minutes, with Hayes getting five of the points.

Franklin survives Rabbit attack

With five weeks of rest and holiday celebration, the Saint Mary's basketball team (3-9) is on the up and coming. The talent of this team is not in question, rather it is the competition.

Saint Mary's faces their toughest schedule since basketball began, according to coach Marvin Wood.

Coach Wood commented, "I saw these group of girls at their best tonight. They proved their worth and ability once again."

Ten points were scored by the Rabbits in the 7.5 minutes of their playing time against the starters of the opposing team.

Jennie Taubenheim led the team with sixteen total points.

Julie McGinn accounted for twelve points in the game, and Sarah Koppertud followed with six points.

Coach Wood had all positive comments about his team, "They all give 110% in practice, and even more on the court in competition."

"In our division, and at college level basketball each school is equal in their choice of athletes," said coach Wood.

"Some school's size may determine success, but we are for the most part equal in what we have to play with. Some of the best athletes at college may not even be on the field, courts, or track."

"Franklin was a very physical team with extreme support from their fans," said McGill.

"Kari and Mollie had a great game," Coach McGraw said.

"They were running the ball well in transition."

"Peirick's strength on offense also includes her ability to handle the ball and make good passes."

"Mollie is a control type of guard," McGraw said. "She sees the floor well. Her greatest strength is that she is lowest in turnovers."

At the half, Notre Dame led by only one point, but a 7-0 run sparked by a Hutchinson lay up and a Peirick three pointer opened up the lead. Three minutes later, Poor and Bowen turned it on for 11 unanswered points which took La Salle out of the game for good.

"For the first time all year we had more than two people doing the scoring," McGraw said. "It was a team effort."
Irish come up short against Spartans and Wolverines

By MICHAEL DAY
Sports Writer

As the legendary Yogi Berra once said, "It was like deja vu all over again."
That was certainly the case for the Notre Dame hockey team this weekend, as matchups with Michigan and Michigan State seemed to follow a similar pattern: play the heavily favored and extremely talented opponent off their feet for two periods before gradually falling apart in the all-important third period.

Despite losing 8-3 to Michigan State the previous night, the Irish responded reasonably well under some excruciating circumstances in their 9-3 loss to Michigan on Saturday.

Amid all this, the Irish stunned the crowd and the Wolverines, as they jumped out to a 2-0 lead before eight minutes were gone in the first period.

"I think we surprised them in the first period," said head coach Ric Schafer.
"Unfortunately, they got mad and picked it up from that point on."

On the first power play opportunity, of the evening, sophomore defenseman Brian Welch slammed the puck beyond the outstretched glove of Wolverine goaltender Al Logan to give the Irish a 1-0 lead.

Just over three minutes later, the Irish struck again. Junior left wing Chris Bales received a Jamie Ling pass, and powered the puck into the back of the net. Bales' score put Notre Dame up 2-0, but that lead quickly disappeared.

After Michigan left wing Jason Botterill and defenseman Chris Fox added goals to tie the game midway through the period, Ling answered with the play of the night for the Irish. The junior center made Michigan defenseman Blake Sloan look foolish, as he faked the astonished Wolverine defender into a complete circle on his way to his 31st point of the season.

That was all she wrote for Notre Dame, as the Wolverines turned a 4-3 second period advantage into a 9-3 landslide victory.

Friday's matchup with Michigan State had strikingly similar results.

Early in the third period with the score at 3-2, a controversial call turned the tide of the game.

MSU left wing Taylor Clarke fell on the puck to prevent a sure Notre Dame goal that would have tied the game. The officials ruled that the play was legal despite the protest of Schafer and assistant coach Tom Carroll.

Following the ruling, the roof caved in for the Irish. The Spartans closed the game with a 5-1 run on their way to the 8-3 victory.

Belles make waves

Coming off of an exhausting training trip in Tennessee, the Saint Mary’s Swimming and Diving team surpassed Hillsdale College in last Friday’s dual meet, 136-102.

In Nashville, the Belles swam two hours in the morning and two hours in the evening, running and practicing numerous drills in between the two intervals. “Training in Tennessee was the equivalent of running a marathon eight days a week,” said coach Greg Janeson.

Although, some of the swimmers times were slower in last Friday’s meet, the majority of the times improved. Shannon Kelleher won both the 500 free and 1000 free, making her personal best in the 1000.

Sara Gillan won the 200 free and placed second in the 500 free. Teresa Popp won the 50 free and 100 free, making a new school record with a time of 56.41. Allison Smith also won the 200 individual medley and the 200 butterfly.

The divers also contributed to the victory by totaling twenty-one points for the Belles. The competition was broken down into two one meter events. Megan McHugh dove for the first time since November due to a back injury while competing an inward one in a half flip, only to win the first round and place second in the second round.

“I was very happy with my diving,” said McHugh. “I didn’t know what to expect coming off of my injury and I was very pleased with the win.”

Barb Kranz finished her last diving meet second in the first round, only losing by one tenth of a point, and she took third place in the second event. Swimmer Katie Northrup stepped up to the diving challenge and scored valuable points for the Belles.

got rolling early on and gave us a lift.”

Williams scored half of Notre Dame’s first 24 points, including two from three-point range. He went 3-of-4 from beyond the three-point arc on the day.

And his offensive play early on translated into an emotional performance on the defensive end, one that rubbed off on the remainder of the Irish squad. The result was a poor shooting day for Massey, the number one Musketeer.

“We were battling on defense,” MacLeod continued. “We were really aggressive.”

Massey hit just 7-of-18 shots, an indicative performance of the entire Xavier squad, who shot a dismal 35.8% from the field.

“I had a lot of trouble getting into the flow of the game,” Massey said. But it happened for Williams, who made a

Unbeaten home streak still alive

Attempts to understand the Notre Dame men's basketball team are best left to trained professionals.

Anyone without a degree in psychology would go mad trying to figure out how a team can appear so feeble one night and so fearsome the next.

Notre Dame mystified its followers again Saturday with a comfortable 84-73 win over Xavier, just four days after a despicable defeat at Dayton.

It wasn't the victory itself that was so surprising, but the way the Irish, minus two of their principle players, dismantled the Musketeers.

Matt Gatiss was home for his grandfather's funeral and Keith Kurowski watched from the sidelines, waiting for medication to heal his minor heart problem.

But Notre Dame nevertheless managed to have five players in double-figures, led by Jason Williams' career-high 19 points.

"I wanted to perform well today after a mediocre performance at Dayton," Williams said. "I felt I let the team down.

Marcus Young, playing extra minutes in Gatiss's absence, scored a career-high 13. He even made 3-of-5 free throws, for god's sake.

That's the kind of afternoon it was for Notre Dame, now 11-6 and fighting for its post-season life.

"We may have already cost ourselves a chance at the NCAA Tournament," Williams said, acknowledging the devastation of last week's loss to Dayton. "But the selection committee is

Notre Dame, coming off a bumbling ten-point loss to Dayton on Tuesday, had its tournament hopes hanging by a thread, one which could have been clipped by the mighty Musketeers, who waited into the Joyce Center sporting an impressive 12-2 record.

But the Irish only used this controversy as fuel for a good performance. And Jason Williams was the match that sparked the blaze.

The senior forward walked into the contest as a mere supporting actor to Xavier's Jeff Massey, an Ekhart, Indiana native who averages about 18 points per game. Both scored 19, but the Irish tri-captain's contribution went a long way towards propelling his team to a surprisingly easy 84-73 win.

Williams' 19 points was a career high, and his shooting percentage soared to 53 percent.

"It was a good effort overall," MacLeod said. "Jason Williams"

It's easy to see why Irish head coach John MacLeod had concerns about his basketball team going into Saturday's matchup with Xavier.
