TERROR HITS HOME

Thousands feared dead as nation begins recovery from strikes in
New York, Washington

Associated Press

NEW YORK
As night fell, the city moved past the nightmarish scenes of thousands of people on fire jumping from buildings and the city itself, people picking through the rubble. The dead and the injured, past the nightmarish scenes of people on fire jumping from buildings and the city itself, people picking through the rubble. The dead and the injured.

Just before 9 a.m. Tuesday two hijacked commercial airliners slammed into the World Trade Center, paralyzing the city and the surrounding area. Shortly thereafter, a third plane headed for Los Angeles crashed into the Pentagon in Washington, D.C., the nation's defense headquarters.

New York crews began heading into ground zero of the terrorist attack to search for survivors and recover bodies. The downtown area was cordoned off and a huge rescue effort was under way. Gov. George Pataki mobilized the National Guard to help, and hundreds of volunteers and medical workers converged on triage centers, offering services and blood.

One man caught under the rubble used his cell phone to reach family in Pennsylvania with a plea for help. "She received a call from him saying he was still trapped under the World Trade Center. He gave specific directions and said he was there along with two New York City sergeants," said Brian Jones, 911 coordinator in Allegheny County. He would not give their names, but said the message was passed to New York authorities.

Emergency Medical Service worker Louis Garcia said initial reports indicated that bodies were buried beneath the two feet of soot on streets around the twin towers. Garcia, a 15-year veteran, said bodies "are all over the place."

Eight hours after the catastrophe began, hundreds of firefighters sat on the West Side Highway or leaned against their rigs, waiting for orders to go into the leveled skyscrapers and see TERROR/page 11

Becoming American

I’ve never been an American. Don’t get me wrong, I am a U.S. citizen, I’ve just never been an American. How can I possibly find something in common with 280 million other people? I was never eaten by another one-word label be pasted on me, so I could never submit to being an American. The way I’ve always seen it, I’m one combination of one out of a million sperm that reached one egg that belonged to somebody who was created from another one-in-a-million sperm combination, a pattern that extends back beyond my imagination. I just saw it as a historical accident; 6 billion people, 90% of whom are illiterate, all living in this world. It was all luck of the draw. Nationality seemed abstract to me, an illusion.

But I think I have learned something about being an American in the last month, and especially Tuesday morning. The first time I ever felt like an American was in class discussion at the European College of Liberal Arts in Berlin last summer. My group had a very negative view of the United States, and I was one of the few who accepted the thought. I just saw it as a way to be pasted on me, so I could be someone else. My group had a heated debate about our readings that week, and I found myself defending a country to which I had never felt any allegiance before.

BECOMING AMERICAN

While national terrorist acts prompted Notre Dame and Saint Mary’s to cancel classes and other regular activity Tuesday, the University and College’s response to the federal emergency proved unique among Indiana schools.

Notre Dame was the only large Indiana university to close Monday.

State schools Ball State University, Indiana University and Purdue University remained open. Classes also remained in session at Indiana University campuses around the state.

“We’re making this a day of prayer in light of the tragedy…”

Lou Nanni, vice president for public affairs and communication

At Butler University, another private Indiana college, classes remained in session and a noon prayer service and a 6 p.m. candlelight vigil Tuesday.

Baker said. Like Notre Dame and Saint Mary’s, Butler officials also established additional counseling service hours and locations.

Baker would not comment on security matters. A security awareness session for students, faculty and staff is planned for today.

Students and alums witness terror first-hand

By ERIN LAUFFA
American News Editor

As Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students learned of Tuesday's terrorist attacks in New York City and Washington, D.C., there was a collective sense of shock and disbelief on the campuses. However, for certain members of the Notre Dame and Saint Mary's family, the news of airline hijackings and crashes was especially personal.

When Notre Dame sophomore Michael Federico first heard about the plane crashes in his hometown of New York City, he immediately thought of friends back at home whose parents work in the World Trade Center.

"I called a lot of people to see how their families were doing. It was really nerve-wracking," he said. Although Federico later learned his friends and their families were OK, he said what trimpered Tuesday has had a significant impact on him, especially because it happened so close to home.

"My first thought was, 'They'll never get those towers down.' Then an hour later, when I heard about the Pentagon, it was like a sinkhole opening up and swallowing America. It was really surreal," he said.

Saint Mary's junior Lauren Berrigan is also in Washington, D.C., participating in the Notre Dame Semester Program. Berrigan said her parents were still concerned for her safety.

"When she finally talked to her mom, how could she describe the impact on him, especially because it happened so close to home. Rykowski realized how serious the situation was. It was really nerve-wracking. She wanted me to come [to Las Vegas], but that's pretty much impossible," Berrigan said.

Although Federico later learned his friends and their families were OK, he said what trimpered Tuesday has had a significant impact on him, especially because it happened so close to home.

"I used to feel safe when I was in the air," said Federico. "Now, I won't be able to go to New York City anymore. It's a little disheartening to find a plane crash at the Pentagon, Wheeler said. She explained that many Washington streets and buildings were shut down on Tuesday morning without hearing about the crashes.

"Nothing was amusing except that the trains were a little slow. The World Trade Center towers were still standing. But that's not all that unusual," LaVelle said. She first heard what happened when she arrived at the office.

"It was really surreal," she said. "It's a little overwhelming, but what I saw made me not want to fly."

Many Notre Dame and Saint Mary's graduates were also working in Washington, D.C. and New York City on Tuesday.

"I'm from New York, so my first reaction was to think of friends and family in the New York World Trade Center. I was [to think of] friends and family that live in the Pentagon, so that was very personal. But in situations in which they once felt very safe, it was difficult to find out what happened to family and friends. Like many people working in New York and Washington, LaVelle said she received many telephone calls on Tuesday from concerned friends and family checking on her welfare. Although she and her husband are safe, LaVelle said she is concerned for some of their friends who also work in Manhattan.

"I would be surprised is someone I know wasn't injured or killed," she said.

Indeed, for many people personally affected by the tragedy, it was difficult to find out what happened to family and friends. The World Trade Center and Pentagon or on one of the hijacked planes.

I'm from New York, so my first reaction was to think of friends and family in the city, and also in Washington, D.C.," said Rose Camilleri, who works at the Basilica. She learned of the World Trade Center bombing on the radio early that morning. Her community has responded well, however, according to Camilleri.

"It's so overwhelming, but what I saw here were people in prayer. That seems like all we can do right now," he said.

Americans question future

By MARIBEL MOREY Assistant News Editor

Tuesday morning, the nation's capital was targeted by four hijacked commercial planes in an attack that was considered one of the most significant in American history, ending thousands of American lives. After the World Trade Center and the Pentagon were targeted, official investigators will begin to assess the nation's current situation and the steps to follow.

Determining responsibility

Sor Tillery, Notre Dame associate professor of political science, said "If you use this as a terrorist group, you have to identify which states to punish. It's a terrorist."

"It's a terrorist," said Alvin Tillery, Notre Dame assistant professor of political science. "But I think it's probably too much to say it's probably extremely difficult to be prevented at the individual level rather than at an individual level because these acts can be avoided in the future," Gastello.

Many of these airlines hire multiple security groups will face discriminations in the Middle East. "We live in a free society and we are not comfortable sacrificing freedom to protect these (terrorist) acts from happening," said Tillery.

In the wake of four hijacked American planes Tuesday, much attention has focused on airport security around the nation. Infiltrating three airports, terrorists successfully evaded security checks and crashed hijacked planes into the nation's largest city and one of its most important buildings.

"People in the Middle East generally love America and Americans," said Tillery. "People should know better than to say this represents one part of the world. The act represents the sick people who perpetrated it."

In the meantime, advances in technology pose the biggest threat to airline security.

"We have to recognize that technology allows people to circumvent the security measures that we provide," Tillery said. "There's a lot of business not going on."

Taking the next step

While many Americans gathered in prayer yesterday and government officials revealed the public of the country's stability, other Americans were questioning the nation's future.

"[In the 60s and 70s] they had a sense of purpose and direction," said John Gastello, United States customs director of the School of Law.

"We have to recognize that this is what our parents felt when they heard the Pearl Harbor," but this happening in the continental United States, not in the middle of the Pacific," said Guo. "Guo also believes that it's like 9/11 in terms of the Pearl Harbor. On the other hand, Brown-Gort says that in terms of life, attack on Pearl was much harsher than Pearl Harbor.

"There's psychological and economic damage to the country, but it's also affecting individuals -- all air traffic is stopped," said Albert-Gort. "There's a lot of business not going on."

We're not comfortable sacrificing freedom to protect these (terrorist) acts from happening," said Tillery.

The world will change, and we are not comfortable sacrificing freedom to protect these (terrorist) acts from happening," said Tillery.

Tillery disagreed with Bush to take some decisive action against people harboring weapons, "I think they need to mass this nation in the emergency room -- stabilizing and reassuring people, being comfort to people. Right now the smoke is still rising and the first thing is to care for people around us, not finding blame. There will be time for other things."

AFGHANISTAN

Taliban: bin Laden not involved

Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan

Afghanistan’s hardline Taliban rulers rejected suggestions that Osama bin Laden, whom they are sheltering, could be behind the devastating missile attacks in the United States on Tuesday.

"We have tried out best in the past and we are willing in the future to assure the United States in any kind of way we can that Osama is not involved in these kinds of activities," the Taliban’s foreign minister, Wakil Ahmed Muttawakil, told reporters. Muttawakil said the attacks on New York, Washington and elsewhere in the United States were "from a humanitarian point of view surely a loss and a very terrifying incident." Asked whether the Taliban condemned the attacks, he said: "We have criticized and we are now again criticizing terrorism in all its forms."

Bin Laden, the exiled Saudi millionaire indicted in the United States on charges of masterminding the bombings of two U.S. embassies in Africa in 1998, has lived here since 1996 under the protection of the ruling Taliban religious militia. Washington accuses him of running an international terrorist network.

A London-based Arab journalist said Tuesday that followers of bin Laden warned three weeks ago that they would carry out a "huge and unprecedented attack" on U.S. interests. The Taliban say bin Laden’s communications have been taken away from him, but several sources close to him — including his family members in Saudi Arabia — say bin Laden has regular access to satellite telephones and other sophisticated communication equipment.

The Taliban, who espouse a harsh brand of Islamic law, have resisted U.S. demands to hand over bin Laden.

After the attacks in East Africa three years ago, Washington retaliated with a blistering missile attack in August 1998, sending more than 70 Tomahawk cruise missiles into eastern Afghanistan apparently targeting training camps operated by bin Laden.

GERMANY

Europeans pledge to battle terrorism

BERLIN

There was quiet discussion among European officials tonight about how, when the United States struck back at whoever was responsible for today’s attacks, European governments and even militaries could assist. The Russian president, Vladimir Putin, also expressed support for retaliation against those responsible.

As countries moved quickly to defend American embassies and institutions on their soil, expressions of solidarity and condolence poured forth. President Jacques Chirac of France cut short a visit to Britain to return to Paris, saying he felt "immense emotion" over these "monstrous bombings." He said the French "are entirely with the American people."

The German foreign minister, Joschka Fischer, wrote his counterpart, Secretary of State Colin L. Powell, a letter of sympathy and solidarity, saying, "We are speechless and disgusted by the terrorist attack on New York and Washington."

Karl Kaiser, the director of the German Council on Foreign Relations and a Schroeder adviser, said that the openness of democratic societies had been "bought at the price of vulnerabil­ity, vulnerability so high that you can conduct a war inside democracies."

For the first time since the British burned down the White House and the attack on Pearl Harbor, he said, the Americans experience what Europeans have experienced: war on home terri­tory."
Thousands attend South Quad Mass

Community gathers to mourn, find support after terrorist attacks

By ALLY JAY
News Writer

Roughly five hours after the last plane crashed, approximately 6,000 Notre Dame and Saint Mary's students, staff, faculty and their children gathered on South Quad to cope with chaos through a Mass presided over by University President Father Edward Malloy.

As the sun shone down on South Quad, the Mass began with opening comments from Father Mark Poorman, vice president for student affairs, and Malloy.

"From 8:45 I've been watching TV like many of you, listening to eloquent spokespeople and statesman trying to make sense of what happened. All I can do is to draw on the well of faith we share," said Malloy.

Malloy also urged the Notre Dame community to take support and solidarity from one another, and to take advantage of the support strategies offered by those in the Coleman-Morse Center.

Throughout the Mass, many students followed Malloy's advice and sat on the grass, huddled together with their arms draped around one another. Some students were visibly teary while others appeared drained and shocked from the day's events.

Although the feeling of sorrow seemed to permeate the crowd, students, faculty and staff had mixed reasons for coming to the mass.

"I came to experience the unity of the community as opposed to the destruction I've seen throughout the day and to pray for the healing of those injured," said Notre Dame junior Bryan Bull.

"It's important for our children to understand that compassion and forgiveness should be the center of our lives and the Mass tells us that. These are qualities that will be needed to rely on to stand against the hatred and anger that may be unleashed in reaction to this violence," said professor Angela Gugliotta.

Others came to the Mass to offer prayers for friends and family missing after the tragedies that occurred in Pittsburgh, New York, and Washington, D.C.

"Two of my friends had internships for this fall at the World Trade Center, and are MIA. No one has heard from them," said senior Kathy Harter.

Senior Brendan Harris came to Mass to possibly find some answers.

About 400 from College community come to Regina chapel to cope with tragedy

By NOREEN GILLESPIE
News Writer

They came to cope with disaster.
Some came embraced in the arms of friends; some came with tears streaming openly down their faces. Some came with eyes pressed closed; some came with eyes wide open in disbelief.

Student after student filed into Regina Hall chapel Tuesday after word ripped through the nation that Washington, D.C. and New York City had been targets of terrorist attacks.

Close to 400 members of the Saint Mary’s community filled the residence hall chapel beyond capacity, with students, faculty and staff overflowing into the hallways to participate in an emergency prayer service to cope with the disasters.

"We gather this afternoon at a time of fear and uncertainty. People stand in fear and disbelief and wonder why this is happening."

Marilou Eldred
Saint Mary's president

Tear-stained and shocked students sat, stood and stuffed inside the crowded chapel where College President Marilou Eldred and Sister Rose Anne Schultz, vice president for Mission, led the service through prayer, scripture readings and petitions.

"We gather this afternoon at a time of fear and uncertainty," said Eldred, who fought tears throughout the 40-minute service. "People stand in disbelief and fear and wonder why this is happening."

Students lit votive candles and prayed for those affected by the tragedy at a candle memorial constructed in the center of the chapel. Voicing prayers for those in the military, family and friends stranded at the disaster locations and for peace, students wept silently as white flames danced on the candle wicks.

Hundreds of students, faculty, staff and clergy also came to a Mass at Church of Loretto and the residence hall chapels throughout the day, according to Campus Ministry.

While most didn’t know anyone directly involved in the terrorist attacks, many came because they needed the comfort of faith.

"I just needed to pray," said junior Katie Rand, from Le Mans Hall. "[When I turned on the TV] I started crying. We had to turn it off. It was just too much to watch."

Students answer call for blood

By MIKE CONNOLLY
News Writer

When tragedy struck hundreds of miles away, many members of the Notre Dame and Saint Mary's communities rushed to area blood banks to donate for the victims of the attack.

The suffering of so many, so close to home, inspired many to donate blood.

"There's probably some girl my age out there, who leads my same life, who needs my help. And to be in her shoes right now... it would be scary," said Le Mans freshman Nina Helmen, who car pooled to one of the blood banks to donate.

For nearly 30 men from Stanford Hall, the first instinct was to find a way to help the victims. Once they found out classes were canceled, they immediately drove down to the Central Blood Bank.

"There was a need and we wanted to do something proactive," said sophomore Aldo Tessi, who organized the trip to the blood bank.

The blood was desperately needed to aid victims of the attacks in New York and Washington D.C., according to the Red Cross. The organization will send 80,000 extra units of blood to the New York region. To meet this demand for blood, the South Bend Medical Foundation extended its hours of operation last night and will extend its hours today.

"We are in a crisis mode right now," said Mary Dunfee, donor recruiter for the South Bend Medical Foundation. "We are going to stay open as long as we need to be open for as many donors as possible."

Wine andwaiting rooms to donate. Sister Linda Kors organized the drive.

"I don't remember being helpless," he said. "This was one of the things we could do to help out a little."

The South Bend Medical Foundation has two locations for blood donation. One at the Central Blood Bank at 549 N. Lafayette Blvd. in South Bend and one at the Edison Lab and Donor Center at 4101 Edison Lakes Parkway in Mishawaka.

Both locations will extend hours for the rest of the week to meet the demand. Specific extended hours for this week have not been determined.

The Red Cross is asking for nearly 300,000 units of blood to be given, reported Le Mans freshman Nina Helmen.

"I remember that it didn't seem real. It wasn't until I watched the funeral on TV that it hit me...the world seemed upside down."

Pratt said today brought back similar feelings of confusion and uncertainty.

"It was strange today to see students used to safety and security get thrown upside down, just as I did during the JFK assassination," she said.

For Walt Collins, a Notre Dame professor of American Studies who graduated from Notre Dame in 1981, Tuesday's events reminded him of the bombing of Pearl Harbor.

"I was 11 when Pearl Harbor happened," Collins said. "It was a shock...but we knew who the enemy was. The problem here is that we don't know who the enemy is, and if we do, what can we do?"

Despite this uncertainty, Collins recalls similar national attitudes to the two tragedies.

Collins described this response as consisting of disbelief and fear followed by retaliation. He noted the similarities ways Americans remained glued to their radios on Dec. 7, 1941, just as today's generation spent most of Tuesday in front of the TV.

ATTACK BRINGS PAST TRAGEDIES TO MIND

By ANDREW THAGARD
News Writer

Tuesday's incidents of four American hijacked planes, the destruction of the World Trade Center Towers and extensive damage to the Pentagon may have brought to mind the 1941 Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, the 1963 assassination of President John F. Kennedy and the 1995 Oklahoma City Bombing for older generations who have witnessed prior tragic historical events.

The day left students to cope with what is likely the biggest national tragedy of their generation.

"This has to be the most tragic morning I remember," said Notre Dame sophomore and Welsh Family resident Rita Veron. "I don't remember being affected by Oklahoma as today. It's not just one city, one building. It's on a huge scale."

Students said that being more mature changed the way they viewed the two events.

"For Oklahoma we got to miss some school," added Shea Helmle, a Notre Dame junior and O'Neill Hall resident. "Now we've become more worldly. We know people all over the place. You have a better grasp of things.

Gas-guzzling motorists storm stations

By KATIE HUGHES
News Writer

Gasoline wholesalers and retailers raised prices nationwide Tuesday, sending many area drivers to lines at gas stations to fill up before prices got any higher. Prices at gas stations close to Notre Dame were up to $1.89 a gallon, and were up to $2.09 in Michigan, while other parts of Indiana, including Anderson, Bloomington and Indianapolis, reached $6 a gallon.

Rising prices could effect travel plans for some Notre Dame students. "I'm going away this weekend to Akron, Ohio. I wanted to fill up before I got any higher," said Josh O'Farrell, a Notre Dame sophomore from Siegfried, who was filling up his Jeep Wrangler.

Lines for gas reached out into the street as people waited to fill up. "I had to wait 45 minutes earlier today," said Carmen Sanchez of South Bend. "I figured I could fill up before prices went up."

Many students who talked to parents in other areas filled up faster. "I'm going away this week-end for a honeymoon package sponsored by Premier Travel," said a Notre Dame student.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

Campus, region take extra security precautions

By SCOTT BRODFUEHRER
Assistant News Editor

Additional security measures were taken on both campuses and in South Bend Tuesday, but officials do not feel students are at risk in the wake of terrorist attacks in New York and Washington, D.C.

"I think everyone is far more attuned to security, but we don't have a greater concern for Notre Dame's security," said associate director of public relations Dennis Brown.

More campus police officers than normal were on duty today and access to the Notre Dame through the main circle was restricted in preparation for the Mass on South Quad, but the increased security was not directly related to the terrorist activities.

"I think we just have asked for more security in case of a problem during the Mass. I don't expect any incidents, but we always have extra security around when we get all the students together," said vice president for public affairs and communications Lou Brown.

Following the Mass, access to the main circle was restored. Notre Dame and Saint Mary's Security had additional officers on patrol Tuesday night for pastoral reasons rather than to protect the communities.

"We will have someone stationed at the Basilica and the Grotto in case someone is really struggling and we need to get a priest to help them," said director of Notre Dame Security/Public Police Rex Yukon.

Even though Notre Dame and its Golden Dome is a major landmark, officials did not feel the campus was at risk for attack.

"We thought the chances for that were miniscule," said Brown.

In South Bend, police officers were put on alert and the federal government closed the U.S. Federal Building and the U.S. bankruptcy court, but no major precautions against violence were taken.

"We have informed all units to try and keep an eye out for anything out of the ordinary, but there are not any extra patrols on duty," said Capt. John Williams, public information officer for South Bend police.

The police department is also discussing the possibility of protection for Muslim groups against any at home retaliation in response to Tuesday's terrorist attacks.

"It's still early, but at this point we are talking about the possibility for retributions against ethnic groups," said Williams.

Like all airports nationwide, flights in and out of the South Bend Regional Airport were suspended by the Federal Aviation Administration and will not resume before noon today, at the earliest.

"All air traffic in the country has been suspended. There is no word as to when that suspension will be lifted. The airport is at a heightened level of security and is likely to stay that way for some time to come," said airport director John Schellino.

Bush promises to promptly avenge terrorist attack

Bush spoke for less than five minutes from the desk that Bill Clinton and John F. Kennedy used before him. Beside the door, a TelePrompTer operator fed Bush the words that he and his speechwriters hastened to pen just an hour earlier. He stumbled a couple of times even as he strove to maintain a commanding air.

Aides pushed an American flag and one with the presidential seal behind him for the somber occasion. Immediately afterward, Bush joined a late-night meeting of his National Security Council and planned to remain overnight at the White House. Bush said the government offices deserted after the bombings Tuesday would open on Wednesday.

He asked the nation to pray for the families of the victims and quoted the Book of Psalms. "And I pray they be comforted by a power greater than any of us spoken through the ages in Psalm 23. Even though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I fear no evil for you are with me."

The United States received no warning of the attacks on the Pentagon and New York's World Trade Center towers.

Bush told his Marine One helicopter to immediately return to Washington, where he was to have boarded Air Force One at 1:30 p.m. EDT for a secret destination that turned out to be Nebraska's Offutt Air Force Base, home to the U.S. Strategic Command, which controls the nation's nuclear weapons. Until three years ago, the Strategic Command also housed the so-called doomsday plane that had been specially equipped to serve as a flying White House in the event of nuclear war.

White House officials were sensitive to any appearance that Bush was not at the helm. Fleischer said Bush wanted to be in Washington, where Cheney led the crisis operations center at the White House, but "he understands that at a time like this, caution must be taken" with his location.

At the first reports of attacks on New York's World Trade Center, Bush told his Sarasota elementary school audience that he was hastening back to Washington. All of that immediately changed — and he was diverted to Louisiana — when a plane slammed into the Pentagon and Washington, too, was under attack.

On Capitol Hill, first lady Laura Bush, who was to have made her debut testifying before the Senate on education, tried to soothe a horrified nation.

"Parents need to reassure their children everywhere in our country that they're safe," she said, grim-faced, as she and Sen. Edward Kennedy announced their hearing was postponed.

Laura Bush and a handful of aides were whisked by motorcade to a secret location away from the White House, which had been evacuated but for the small corps of foreign policy advisers who staffed the basement Situation Room. Fleischer said the 19-year-old girls, Barbara at Yale University in Connecticut and Jenna at the University of Texas in Austin, were also moved to secure, undisclosed locations.

"Today, our fellow citizens, our way of life, our very freedom, came under attack in a series of deliberate and deadly terrorist acts."

WASHINGTON

A grim-faced President Bush asked the nation to find comfort in Scripture as he mourned the deaths of thousands of Americans in Tuesday's atrocities and vowed to avenge their killings.

"Today, our nation saw evil," he said. In his first prime-time Oval Office address, Bush said the United States would retaliate against "those behind these evil acts," and any country that harbors them.

Bush spoke from the Oval Office just hours after b Jonking between Florida and air bases in Louisiana and Nebraska for security reasons. Fighter jets and decoy helicopters accompanied his evening flight to Washington and the White House, where his Marine One helicopter stood vigil on the South Lawn in the event of another evacuation.

With smoke still pouring out of rubble in Washington and New York, Bush declared: "These acts shattered steel, but they cannot dent the steel of American resolve."

Bush seemed to take on the persona of the biblical David after he spoke, waiting to see how his words would be received.

Bush had been in Texas in Austin, where he was diverted to Sarasota, Fla., and the White House, where his Marine One helicopter stood unarmed. He then boarded Air Force One at 1:30 p.m. EDT for a secret destination that turned out to be Nebraska's Offutt Air Force Base, home to the United States' Strategic Command, which controls the nation's nuclear weapons. Until three years ago, the Strategic Command also housed the so-called doomsday plane that had been specially equipped to serve as a flying White House in the event of nuclear war.

U.S. had no warning of attacks

Associated Press

WASHINGTON

For all its technological prowess and military might, the United States didn't see this coming.

None of the vaunted intelligence tools at the nation's disposal were warning of the looming nightmare — a massively coordinated effort to hijack and crash four airliners at the same time.

We've learned they had no reports that such attacks were possible.

Not from the CIA's networks of spies and informants. Not from the FBI's myriad counterintelligence agents. Not from the National Security Agency's tele- phone and computer taps. Not from the military's satellites or space planes.

"If there had been successful intelligence gathering, we would have thwarted the attacks," said Senator Richard Shelby, chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, which oversees the nation's $20 billion-plus intelligence budget.

"There's never going to be enough money to cover all the bases," said Shelby. "We cannot afford these kinds of failures.

"There were general warnings of possible terrorist activity, which would come and go with some frequency. But nothing like this was foreseen."

"We also had warnings of a standing security and intelligence failure," said Mike Yarle, a terrorism expert and former Army officer. "In both those spheres, major errors have evidently occurred. Heads should roll."

"The clues and the investigation are going to be as difficult to unravel as the testimony of this kid operation should have been its downfall," said Yarle.

"To talk about the critical statements of the intelligence community, CIA spokesman Mark Mansfield said, "The CIA has worked diligently and persistently to prevent terrorist threats."

"We closely tied to the hijack of four or more is absolutely a commitment we will have to keep."

"I'm really ticked off," Hatch said. "If I had bin Laden on the defensive so we will be thinking about how we are going to take these with him rather than plot mass murder."
A DAY OF PRAYER AND MOURNING

Following the attack on the World Trade Towers and the Pentagon Tuesday morning, the Notre Dame and Saint Mary's community came together in prayer and mourning. Thousands of students filled South Quad for a community Mass while others quietly prayed at the Grotto searching for comfort in a time of tragedy.
An Alumni Hall resident hung a flag out his window shortly after the attacks. Flags across the country hung at half staff Tuesday as America mourned the loss of thousands of lives in an attack on the World Trade Center.

University President Father Edward Malloy presided over the community Mass to remem-

World Trade Towers was signed by of candles at the Grotto.

Two students comfort each other at the Grotto Tuesday afternoon. Rosary services were held every hour on the hour until 1 a.m. to pray for the victims of the attacks.
Tragedy cannot destroy faith

Sometimes, there are no answers. There are no answers to Tuesday's tragic attacks on the Pentagon and the World Trade Center. There are no answers to explain the attack on the heart of our nation. But as a nation left vulnerable by the brutal blow to our freedom, we crave the need for an explanation.

No answers were found Tuesday as the nation sat mesmerized by the seemingly insurmountable tragedy that evolved on our television screens. We were angry, we were scared, we were violated.

And still, we have no answers.

But even watching in uncertainty, the students at Saint Mary's and Notre Dame turned to the one place where they could find answers: in faith. Even following the tragedy where, according to President Bush, "our citizens, our way of life and very freedom came under attack," the faith-bound community held together in prayer, searching together to explain the day's events.

Pray for peace. I don't know what’s right, and I'll be the first to admit that. I can all hope for is a little perspective from this tragedy — and perspective is something I don't have a lot of, being a wealthy white male American college student.

Is personal suffering remedied by inflicting suffering on someone else? How often do we, as Americans, lament the endless cycle of redemptive violence that plagues war torn areas around the world? Maybe praying for peace should be on every day's agenda.

Students and faculty respond to terrorist attack

Terrorism is an act of war

This is a national and global tragedy which weighs on all our hearts, and it is a personal tragedy for the tens or hundreds of thousands of people who lost relatives or whose relatives were injured in the terrorist attacks.

Terrorism is a form of war. Terrorists cause pain to achieve political objectives. So far, though, we do not know who the enemy is or what their war aims are.

For a war, let us put things in perspective. We may have lost five or ten thousand people today. Perhaps less, perhaps far more. We lost approximately 67,500 American lives in battle in World War I and Vietnam, 33,000 battle dead in Korea. So we may have lost today something near a third of the soldiers we lost in each of these three major wars. As these attacks today killed mainly civilians, we are all soldiers in this war.

On the other hand, we have lost a very tiny part of our national population and economy. We’ll be back, and we’ll be fine. This is not to be cavalier, but to suggest that looking at the long term and the big picture can help us remain calm and confident.

Save for Vietnam, we emerged from all of our wars with many human tragedies, but really quite strong as a country. From Vietnam, our soul was tarnished, and our soul, our psychological sense of safety and well-being may well be the biggest price we pay when we look back at today with historical perspective.

This was an extremely well-organized attack. These people simulated a hijacked, seemingly hijacked, three making it right on target. As the hijackers likely had to kill the pilots and fly the planes themselves, they had to be trained to fly some of the most advanced civilian aircraft in the skies today.

We can guess that the plane from Pittsburgh crashed and did not accomplish its mission due to the courage of its pilots. Considering how much of this attack planning and execution took place on U.S. soil, this is a bigger intelligence failure than Pearl Harbor.

Approximately 1,500 died at Pearl Harbor. It was also well planned in that the terrorists may have gone into the attack starting with only a few very light weapons and no truck bombs and still managed huge devastation. We can imagine weapons of mass destruction such as nuclear, biological or chemical weapons well might have been used.

As we look to the future, there are several paths that we can take and perhaps one silver lining.

First, the United States may take a more isolationist turn. The United States will debate the continued worth of our involvement and perhaps our presence in the world. Is the price paid today worth having troops stationed globally and being politically involved throughout the world, especially the Middle East?

We hope we do not take an isolationist turn for two reasons. We are so powerful that no matter what we do, people will always find a way to be bad at us. Also, if we turn inward, those states we help defend will have to fend for themselves. States from Japan to Turkey may become less dependent on us.

Second, we will take strong steps to prevent this from happening again. This will pose a threat to our civil liberties and privacy. We may have to give up some privacy and liberty to gain more security.

On the other hand, considering how much privacy and liberty we have already lost to corporate and government databases, all without much debate at all, we may lose a lot of liberty and privacy and not even know what happened. From airport security to monitoring of communications, expect many changes.

Third, many experts on terrorism have downplayed the possibility that terrorists would ever execute an attack on this scale. In their logic, terrorists would never hurt their ability to achieve political goals and gain sympathy by such a large scale attack. The calming conventional wisdom of many terrorism experts is wrong. Terrorists clearly can cause massive damage and their goals may have been simply to cause a maximum amount of pain. What goals are served by this pain, we do not know. But many who would wish us ill would delight in an isolationist turn by the United States.

Fourth, the United States has always enjoyed a luxurious security situation: 3,000-mile wide moats and peaceful countries surround us. All of our major wars since the Mexican and Civil War have been fought on others’ soil. Those days are over. We are vulnerable. While the United States will prosper and be strong over the long term, we have lost our innocence. Airplanes and skyscrapers will never seem the same. Nor will the New York City skyline.

The only silver lining I see is that these attacks did not involve weapons of mass destruction (WMD), which include nuclear, chemical, or biological weapons so far as we know. While these attacks were certainly massive, a WMD attack could kill hundreds of thousands and a biological attack could kill millions. The silver lining is that our response to this attack will likely help us prevent and defend against possible WMD attacks.

The best advice I’ve heard today is to find someone to hug. Do what you can find to please and help others.

Fight violence with love

"Lord, I am not worthy to receive you, but only say the word and I shall be healed."

This line at the Mass in the wake of the terrorist attacks reminded me of a scene from a previous Mass in my hometown.

A mother and a little girl sat a pew ahead of my mother and me. After the congregation dutifully chanted the same line, the little girl, naïve and innocent, turned to her mother and asked, "Mommy, what’s the word? What’s the word, Mommy?" Perhaps the answer to the child’s question is also the answer to the chaos and pandemonium plaguing our nation today.

As has been illustrated, faith alone is not enough to perpetuate the elusive utopia of peace. The faith that the terrorists, these thieves of life, embrace is what moved them to the actions that they took.

Instead, the word we are looking for is respect. Cambride defines respect as politeness and honor shown towards someone or something that is considered important. I cannot fathom what could be more important than human life and the immortal human soul.

From this whole ordeal, let us learn to live with respect, breathe respect and breed respect. Let us learn to fight violence with love. Let us learn to transfer our being the victims into being the victors.

May God bless and protect our country, and may He, as an example for us, absolve the sins of those who have sullied us.

Imagine living in peace

"Imagine all the people, living life in peace. You might say I’m a dreamer but I’m not the only one. I hope someday you’ll join us and the world will be as one."

As I ponder the words of John Lennon, graphic clips of a collapsing World Trade Center flooded my mind. While I pray for peace I am haunted by the image of a man sprinting for his life. As though I could taste the terror, feel his pain. With today’s tragedy comes much frustration and anger. Americans feel vulnerable; reality snaps us hard and we recognize that we are not as safe as we might believe. The unimaginable happened, blatant acts of evil occurred and innocent people died. Fathers, wives, nieces and friends were unjustly taken from us.

As I ponder the words of John Lennon, I watched a live Independence Day Mass and saw the men and women of Notre Dame standing in unison chanting, “We shall overcome.”

I try to imagine that the world will someday be as one. Yet, the United States was viciously attacked. Imagine that. Dazed and confused, I watched a live Independence Day and questioned the world in which we live. But in the midst of such evil, thousands of people gathered at South Quad together as one. This afternoon sitting among my peers and professors, I was overwhelmed by hope. I feel proud to be a part of the Notre Dame community.

Life is unexpected and we take for granted much that we have. But when the unimaginable occurs we join together in support and faith. On this sad, emotionally draining day we joined hands and prayed together, expressing our sorrow for the victims and a sense of hope for the future. Imagine that.

Purdue practices amid national tragedy

By PAUL TREMBACKI and DOUG HEALEY
The Exponent (Purdue University)

Head coach Joe Tiller said the Boilmakers weren't focused during Tuesday's practice. That was to be expected, especially from players such as wide receiver Chris James, tailback Joey Harris, defensive end Akin Ayodele and quarterback Carl Buergler.

As the team practiced in the aftermath of the terrorist attacks on the United States, Harris and Buergler had concerns about family members who had not been heard from as of Tuesday night, while James was simply waiting to hear his sister's voice.

"I heard she's all right, but I'm not going to believe it until I talk to her myself," said James, who planned to call his sister-Julie, a law student at New York University-who was not injured Tuesday night. Julie James, who lives in Greenwich Village about a mile from the World Trade Center, gave blood to help local victims in New York after e-mailing her family to let them know she was OK.

James' mother, a Tampa, Fla., resident, had been crying and frantically calling relatives throughout the country, all day, which Chris said scared him.

But Harris, who has a relative with a job in the World Trade Center, and Buergler, whose uncle was on a plane headed for Pittsburgh Tuesday morning, hadn't heard from their relatives as of Tuesday evening.

"It's scary," Buergler said. "It's scary that something like that can happen."

"It was a stressful thing practicing. There's stuff like that on your mind and at the same time you're trying to prepare for Notre Dame — one of the biggest games of the season.

Although Ayodele had some concerns about his mother's friend, who was in New York and eventually found to be unharmed, he was happy to practice.

"It's something we can do out here to forget about that for a few hours," Ayodele said. "Our team's out here practicing and it's to our advantage to make us better, to get an extra edge, and hopefully we did that today."

Tiller and Purdue athletic director Morgan Burke wanted the team to be together in the aftermath of the terrorist attacks on the country.

"A lot of these kids, we're their surrogate parents away from home," Burke said. "So I figured that's a good message." Burke also had team chaplain Marty Dittrich lead the team in a prayer for the victims.

The team then went about preparing for its game with Notre Dame, which, as of Tuesday night, was scheduled to take place at 2:30 p.m. Saturday in Ross-Ade Stadium.

letic directors would be talking about athletic events in the conference, including Saturday's football games. "It's too early for me to speculate that games are going to be cancelled. I don't think it's fair to say that," Lister said. "I think it's fair to say they'll be discussing weekend sporting events."
But even if the Big Ten decides to play the games, the NCAA could still decide otherwise. Conference commissioners from all 10 Division I football conferences were expected to discuss the weekend afternoon after gathering input from their respective conference schools.
"The games themselves are insignificant in the face of what has happened today," Dempsey said in a statement posted on the NCAA Web site. "Our focus is entirely on the safety of student-athletes, athletics personnel and fans. We urge schools to make sound decisions about proceeding with contests today and in the coming days."
The final decision may not rest in the hands of the NCAA.
Government officials will most likely determine whether or not it is safe for teams to travel by air or if crowds from 35,000 to 100,000 should gather at football stadiums across the country. The NCAA has said it will comply with any executive orders issued by President Bush. Already, all three games scheduled for Thursday night have been cancelled. The Ohio-North Carolina State game has been rescheduled for
Nov. 24, while no make-up date has been set for the cancelled Penn State-Virginia contest. The Pac-10 has cancelled all athletic events through the weekend, including three Saturday football games, the most high profile one being No.
1 Miami at No. 13 Washington.

U2 postpones ticket sales in light of attack

By SAM DERHEIMER
News Writer

In light of the tragic events in New York and Washington D.C. early Tuesday morning, ticket sales for the second leg of U2's North American tour have been postponed indefinitely, according to Joe Sassano, event manager of the Joyce Center.

"There is no conversation about the tour being postponed. Right now all it is a postponement of the national ticket on-sale date."

Joe Sassano
event manager of the Joyce Center

"Other than the actual date of the sale, Sassano said ticket distribution will go on unchanged. Students from Notre Dame, Saint Mary's and Holy Cross will still have the opportunity to buy tickets before they go on sale to the public. Joyce officials say they also still plan to implement the two-ticket lottery system in which all students who arrive on time to obtain the first ticket will then receive a second ticket that will contain a lottery number. One number will be chosen at random, and the student with the matching lottery ticket will then be first in line to buy a ticket to the show."

Ticket prices for the show will be $46 for general admission floor seats and $86 for assigned seats within the Joyce Center. Tickets sold during the student pre-sale and on the first day of the public sale will sell for cash only.

Officials shut schools down

By JASON McFARLEY
News Editor

Notre Dame and Saint Mary's shut down campus activities and operated on heightened security Tuesday following horrifying terrorist acts in New York and Washington. Officials at both schools canceled classes and other campus events by 11 a.m. Tuesday and announced a day for reflection of the national crisis.

"Today is a day of prayer," Melanie Engler, Saint Mary's director of public relations, said Tuesday.

At 12:20 p.m., the College held a prayer service in the Regina Hall chapel. A second service took place at 4 p.m. in the Church of Loreto.

On campuses where students, faculty and staff claim national ties, Tuesday's plane hijackings and strikes on New York's World Trade Center and the Pentagon in Washington kept many people glued to television sets or talking on long-distance phone calls with loved ones.

The most deadly act of terrorism on U.S. soil was caused for communal prayer at Catholic institutions like Notre Dame and Saint Mary's, according to Lou Nanni, University vice president for public affairs and communication.

"We're going to try to minister to the community," Nanni said Tuesday morning prior to the mid-afternoon Mass on South Quad.

"Today is a day of prayer."

Melanie Engler
director of public relations at Saint Mary's

"We don't believe our concerns were exaggerated, but we do believe if there were to be threats, they'd be more national or governmental in scope," Nanni said about the possibility of terrorist action here.

Nanni said Notre Dame Security/Police remained in consultation with University President Father Edward Malloy Tuesday.

Saint Mary's increased the number of security officers on duty and extended their work shifts Tuesday, according to Security Director Richard Chlebek. Both schools decided by 8 p.m. Tuesday to resume classes today.

All activities will go on as scheduled, except Saint Mary's athletics events postponed due to a decision by the Michigan Intercollegiate Athletic Association.

"We wanted to wait and see what the president said," Linda Timm, Saint Mary's vice president for student affairs, said after President Bush's national address. "He said the country should be back to business... to get back on our feet."

Bush faces historic test

Associated Press

WASHINGTON
When the first ghastly images flickered across the TV, a top adviser to President Bush set down her coffee cup and cursed.

"Oh my God," she said.

From that moment, it was clear that Bush would face a test of historic proportions—the shocking slaughter of Americans at terrorist hands. He was suddenly in his historic test would face that Bush had public's perceptions of him at home and abroad.

"This is the ultimate test, the ultimate barometer. This is why we have a president," said Clinton's national security adviser, Sandy Berger.

The terror attacks in the nation's business and government capitals may push the terrifying economy into recession, analysts suggested.

The Federal Reserve said it stood ready to pump extra money into the economy if needed to try to avert such a development.

The Fed's promise to supply additional money to the banking system was similar to a pledge issued on the morning after the October 1987 stock market crash. That action, only two months into Alan Greenspan's tenure as chairman, was credited with keeping the economy out of recession.

Private analysts, however, said the Fed's magic of lower interest rates and ample supplies of cash may not be enough to overcome Tuesday's series of attacks. They came as the economy already was struggling and consumer confidence was faltering.

"The economy has been on a high-wire act straddling between a recession and anemic growth. Now the terrorists have cut the wire underneath our feet," said Sung Won Sohn, chief economist at Wells Fargo in Minneapolis. "The United States and the rest of the world are likely to experience a full-blown recession now."

President Bush and other administration officials sought to bolster confidence.

"Our financial institutions remain strong and the American economy will be open for business as well," Bush said in a televised address to the nation.

The President's Working Group on Financial Markets said officials had "every confidence" stock trading would resume "as soon as it is both appropriate and practical."

The group of Treasury and Federal Reserve officials, along with market regulators, coordinates government responses during market crises.

Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill, in Tokyo on Tuesday, said in a statement that "our nation's financial markets are strong and resilient."

Officials said that O'Neill had cancelled his schedule for Wednesday, including a speech before the National Press Club in Tokyo and a meeting with Japanese Prime Minister Junichiro Koizumi.

The concern among economists is that the attacks will cause consumers to cut back further on their spending, which accounts for two-thirds of the nation's economic activity.

Ew a before the attacks, signs of trouble were evident as Americans grew more worried about their jobs with each fresh round of job announcements.

The government had reported last Friday that the unemployment rate shot up to 4.9 percent in August as job losses in manufacturing climbed above 1 million.

Terror postpones competition

By ANDREW SOUKUP
Associate Sports Editor

A decision is expected to be made later today whether or not the Notre Dame-Purdue football game scheduled for Saturday afternoon will be cancelled, The Observer learned Tuesday.

In the wake of the most deadly terrorist attacks in American history, athletic commissioners are expected to announce this afternoon their decision regarding Saturday's football game.

While Notre Dame officials have yet to say they have discussed Saturday's football game, they said they have not yet made a decision.

Purdue athletic director Morgan Burke and Notre Dame athletic director Kevin White spoke Tuesday afternoon.

Burke said the game was still scheduled to be played Saturday. He said on the Purdue athletic department's Web site also said Saturday's football game was still scheduled to take place.

White confirmed that he had a conversation with Burke, but said the two had not discussed the possibility of cancelling the game.

"Right now we're consumed by the enormity of the situation," he said.

White also confirmed that he, along with several other high-ranking University officials, met with Notre Dame President Edward Malloy throughout the day to discuss the terrorist attacks, but said it is too early to say if playing football Saturday never came up.

The two schools expect to reach a decision within the next couple of days, White said.

While both Notre Dame and Purdue released Tuesday press conferences by each head coach, only the Irish cancelled practice. Purdue's coaches continued practicing as planned, Purdue's sports information office confirmed.

The decision to play Saturday's game could also be in the hands of the Big Ten conference, of which Purdue is a member. Athletic directors from each of the 11 Big Ten schools were expected to discuss the situation later Tuesday morning in a conference call.

According to the associate Big Ten commissioner, said the

MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL

Commission suspends play for first time in 56 years

NEW YORK

Major league baseball postponed its entire schedule of 15 games Tuesday night following terrorist attacks in New York and Washington.

It was the first time since President Franklin D. Roosevelt's death in 1945 that baseball wiped out an entire day of regular season play, other than because of work stoppages or weather.

Baseball commissioner Bud Selig made the decision about 3 1/2 hours after the attacks began in New York.

"In the interest of security and out of a sense of deep mourning for the national tragedy that has occurred today, all major league baseball games for today have been canceled," Selig said in a statement.

Selig also called off the owners' quarterly meeting that was set to start Tuesday. He did not make any decisions about Wednesday's games.

"I will continue to monitor the situation and a daily basis and make ongoing decisions accordingly," Selig said.

"My deepest sympathy and prayers go out to the families and victims of this horrific series of events."

It was the fourth time the major leagues postponed an entire day's schedule other than because of labor strife or weather, according Scott Mondore of the National Baseball Hall of Fame and Museum.

The others were Aug. 2, 1923, when President Warren G. Harding died; June 6, 1944, when Allied forces invaded France in World War II; and April 14, 1945, two days after the death of President Roosevelt.

Yankee Stadium, perhaps the building that most symbolizes American sports, was evacuated within 90 minutes of the first attacks.

Government officials increased security outside the 78-year-old ballpark, located in the South Bronx, more than 10 miles from the World Trade Center in lower Manhattan.

"The ballpark is ringed with police," Yankee spokesman Rick Cerrone said after leaving his office.

The NPL was mulling whether to postpone this weekend's schedule.

"Regarding Sunday's games, we will make no decision today," league spokesman Joe Browne said. "We'll gather information and speak to several parties within the next 24 to 48 hours."

NASCAR also was monitoring the situation before making any decisions on Like other schools around the nation, Notre Dame and Saint Mary's have suspended athletic competition in light of Tuesday's tragic events in Washington, New York and Pennsylvania. All competition scheduled for Tuesday and Wednesday has also been postponed indefinitely.

Tonight's Irish women's volleyball game, scheduled for 7 p.m. in the Joyce Center, has been postponed indefinitely.

"Absolutely I agree with the decision," Irish head coach Debbie Brown said. "I just think it was good even today to not practice. It's really hard to walk into the gym after something like that.

At Saint Mary's, Tuesday's home soccer game against Hope College has also been postponed. The Belles volleyball team, scheduled to travel to Michigan and take on MIAA rival Calvin College Tuesday, will make up that game later in the season.

"This is just to touch the lives of too many people," Saint Mary's athletic director Lynn Bachman said Tuesday afternoon.

"Too many lives are affected, too many lives have been lost. It is not a time for competition, it is a time for prayer and reflection."

Events scheduled for Wednesday, "It's really hard to walk into the gym after something like that.

The Irish women's soccer team has scheduled games in California on Friday and Sunday against Santa Clara and Stanford, respectively. Head coach Ron Lohrenz expressed concern about boarding a flight to California.

"We don't really know the status of the threat quite yet, it's hard to sit and speculate," Waldrum said Tuesday evening.

"Tonight, I wouldn't be real comfortable."

Waldrum stressed the trust placed in the athletic department's hands to look after its athletes.

"I'm responsible for 25 young people and their safety," Waldrum said. "Their parents trust us with that safety. I have complete faith that Kevin White and Father Malloy will do what's in the best interests of the University."

The Irish men's soccer team is scheduled to host the Mike Berticelli Memorial Tournament this weekend at Alumni Field. But Rhode Island and St. Mary's (Calif.) are both scheduled to play in that tournament, but may not be able to attend depending on the status of air travel.
