Weekend retreat targets ND men

By MATT BRAMANTI  News Writer

In an effort to increase male participation in its retreat programs, the Notre Dame Office of Campus Ministry will sponsor a "Man’s Weekend" beginning Friday afternoon. The program, which will be held at a Congregation of Holy Cross property in LaPorte, Ind., is designed for men who dislike the "touchy-feely" approach of many retreats," said Father Kevin Russeau, who coordinates retreats for Campus Ministry.

Russeau said that weekend retreats, like the Freshman Retreats, Sophomore Road Trip, and Notre Dame Encounters, have been more popular among female students.

"I realized that it was a lot easier to recruit women," he said. "I realized that we needed to give something to each man on some retreats."

He attributes this disparity to the idea that men generally keep matters of faith to themselves, whereas women are more open with their religious beliefs. Accordingly, the weekend is designed to be very different.

Themed nights at Legends result in mixed opinions

By TERESA RIALISH  Assistant News Editor

Students heading to Legends this weekend expecting to hear their favorite radio songs may find a surprise they didn't expect.

Over the past two weeks, managers and DJs at Legends have instituted a schedule of theme nights that involves playing a certain type of music for "heavy rotation" on each night.

Professor of theology, agreed

Combining the 25th anniversary celebration, the beatification of Mother Teresa on the 19th, and the consistory of new cardinals simply makes it more convenient for cardinals visiting Rome for these closely scheduled events.

Legend's tine night nights are drawing some criticism.

"With the theme nights I don't think they can compete with off-campus parties or clubs," said Katie Hunter. "Legends needs to establish itself as a good nightclub.

Pope appoints 31 cardinals earlier than expected

Fueling already-circulating speculations about his declining health, Pope John Paul II, 83, surprised the Catholic community Sept. 29 when he appointed 31 new cardinals — the group that will choose his successor — months earlier than originally expected.

Last Sunday’s announcement came three weeks in advance of the week-long Vatican celebrations of the pope’s 25th anniversary, which will now coincide with the consistory ceremony in which the new cardinals are installed. While Vatican officials gave no specific explanation for the consistory’s earlier date, which is set for Oct. 21, two Notre Dame experts on Vatican issues said they believe the announcement reflected a combination of John Paul II’s poor health, his intention to ensure his continued legacy and his eagerness to make these celebrations special.

"I think he knows he is coming to the end of his life, and he wanted to reward certain bishops for their loyalty and service," said Father Richard McBrien, professor of theology and Crowley-O'Brien Chairmain of Theology at Notre Dame. "At the same time, perhaps [he wanted] to ensure that his successor will carry on his program."

"I suspect that it was primarily for health reasons," he said. "Secondarily, he may have wanted to do something dramatic on the eve of these papacy celebrations."

Although the Patriot Act has had little direct effect on University Libraries according to Director of Libraries Jennifer Younger, the applications of the legislation allow for the restrictions of intellectual freedom and patron record confidentiality — two issues that she and other librarians find troubling.

Libraries and civil rights groups have reacted strongly to the legislation signed into law by President Bush Oct. 26, 2001. The Berkeley, Calif. public library instructed employees to tell law enforcement officials that they were unable to act on subpoenas.
INSIDE COLUMN
Books and Butt Shorts

The soothing, tinkling classical music. The gentle, subdued lighting. The rows and rows of Irish butt shorts, which come in more colors than a bag of M&Ms and are just as much of a guilty pleasure.

The sensual overload that is this shopper's high is mostly thanks to campus — no boutiques like the Bubble. So when that inestimable itch hits, we kick to the consumer's paradise that is the Hammes Notre Dame bookstore: a not-quite-Barnes and Noble with everything from keychains to Kant, shut glasses to Scripture.

It's innocently misleading. Yes, there are books for sale, a fact that most of us whine about at least four times a year when we shell out $80 for a textbook we will likely open twice, and then are dismayed when we get a buyback price of $15. But all concerns about books are forgotten and all remaining bitterness is forgiven when we consider the Real Addiction — Notre Dame apparel.

Few things in this world scream "I'm classics I confirm! I'm connected!" as well as a Notre Dame hooded sweatshirt. I'm not talking about the annoyingly fluster-septig new arrival of panel pink, or the snobbish superhero conveyed by the phrase "Notre Dame Engineering" impulsively splashed across gray cotton. You know the one I mean — always gray, hunter green, or navy blue with an interlocking ND or curious "Irish" — simple, traditional, and yet almost as satisfying to put on as it is to utter those magical words, "put it on my student charge!"

A Notre Dame apparel craving is as real as that of any other drug—it strikes quickly, tugs strongly and can only be subdued with a good hit. And like any addiction, it only gets worse every time you appease it. My own story, it seems, is the same.

German Bar Offers Kindergarten for Men

HAMBURG, Germany — A German bar is offering women who want to go shopping without their partners the chance to park them at what it bills as the country's first kindergartens for men.

For $11.80, the Nox Bar in downtown Hamburg is offering boys' games and home-improvement coaching as well as a meal and two beers for men left there for a Saturday afternoon, while women are free to shop in the city's swanky boutiques.

So far, the "Mannengarten" has been a hit, with 20 men dumped there the first week, and 27 last Saturday, bar manager Alexander Stein said Tuesday.

"Many of the guys see it as just a gag, but then when they talk to their friends they get on really well with the others," Stein said.

Governor's Wife Speaks Singer

BALTIMORE — The wife of Gov. Robert Ehrlich said it is important for women to get as much education as possible to avoid becoming dependent on anyone else.

"It is incredibly important to get that message to young women. You know, really, if I had an opportunity to shoot Britney Spears, I think I would," Ehrlich said Friday.

Pope Duarte tells 'Cinderella story'

By NICOLE ZOOK
News Writer

Stella Pope Duarte hit the stage at Saint Mary's Carroll Auditorium Tuesday night—literally. In keeping with the theme of her talk, "Tending the Flame: Writing Through Revelation and Self-Knowledge," the award-winning author lit the bann on candies at Saint Mary's for one night. "This flame, this light preceded prayer at home," Pope Duarte said. "I love to encourage people to tend who they are. Tend your flame." Pope Duarte encouraged and entertained an audience of roughly 70 with stories, quotes from famous authors, and readings from her two major works, "Fragile Night" and "Let Their Spirits Dance." She stressed the importance of self-discovery. "I come from this modern world. I come from la Sonorita barrio, but also this ancient world, and I also come from an Irish background," she said. "I come from many worlds. And those of you who are writing, you need to understand your world. The more worlds you have, the more you can give to your characters." Pope Duarte was active and energetic onstage, bringing not only candles, but a whole table of props, including a binder of pictures and an apron her mother wore. She donned the robe and wore. She donned the robe and apron. She stressed the importance of faith, self-discovery and perseverance in her "Tending the Flame: Writing Through Revelation and Self-Knowledge" lecture at Saint Mary's Tuesday. "Dreams are sacred ground. Nobody can touch you in your dreams," she said. "I think the most exciting aspect is that relationship, it will be faithful to you," she said. Pope Duarte is a self-described "Cinderella story. She did not intend writing to be her main career, and began as a grief and loss counselor. She said she started writing only after her father came to her in a dream, and challenged students to follow their own dreams. "Stay with your manuscripts when you want to quit. Your work is like a marriage. You write for better, for worse, and sometimes until death do you part. Writing is a relationship. If you’re faithful to that relationship, it will be faithful to you," she said. Pope Duarte encouraged her listeners in other ways, urging them to take risks, leave their stories for their children, and never give up. Allocation of faculty budget resources reexamined at ND
Student credit hour demands, National Resource Council rankings, Catholic identity and diversity are considered

By WILL PUCKETT
News Writer

At the beginning of each semester, each department sends out an analysis of students that classes will be available to them, and that faculty will be available to teach those classes. However, the process that makes this happen is much as an exercise in budgeting, in faculty lines, or long-term faculty positions that have space in the budget, and then the process continues from there.

There are several different levels at which the allocation of resources is analyzed, starting at the departmental level and continuing up to the Board of Trustees, according to University spokesman Matt Storin. Given the economic downturn, the process has become increasingly difficult in recent years, he said.

The University received approximately $126.75 million in gifts and pledge payments in 2001-02, according to the Office of Institutional Research. This is down from $142.24 million in 2000-01, and $140.79 million in 1999-2000.

The endowment has also decreased, with the 2000-01 fiscal year showing $2.8 billion in endowment assets, down from $3.1 billion in the 1999-2000 fiscal year.

"The reality is that is going to be decisions made at all levels, because it's a tougher economic climate than we've had in the past," Storin said.

When asked about the possibility of an improvement in the economic climate having an effect on University budgeting or allocating resources, Storin took a wait-and-see approach.

"It's too early in the budget process to tell what's going to happen," Storin said. "It's an ongoing process, which ends up with a budget being prepared for the Board of Trustees by their winter meeting." The Board of Trustees decides the final budget for the University, a lot of work goes into assembling that budget. Deciding which colleges and departments within the University are allocated resources, as well as analyzing what each department or college requests in the Strategic Plan and other long-term indicators, makes up most of the allocation process.

John Affleck-Graves, vice president and associate provost, said that this process of integrating budgets and plans is central to the process of allocating resources.

"We look at each school and try to see where it looks like we are out of line (with respect to faculty and programs)," Affleck-Graves said. "We try to do as good a job as we can in fulfilling the University's mission with the faculty and resources we have available, but we also try to look at what other programs are doing."

Each college sends a Strategic Plan to the Provost's Office, which is analyzed to determine priorities of the other college plans. The different requests in each college's priorities are considered after discussion of University priorities and college priorities.

"Assigning priorities is always hard, especially since no one college is more important than another," Affleck-Graves said. "However, we do have to make decisions about what can be funded, and what we can do with the resources we have available."

Those resources have been less plentiful in recent years, and this has resulted in even more discussion at all levels of what really needs to be done. According to College of Arts and Letters Dean Mark Roche, the college-level resource allocation process is perhaps more complex.

Roche delineated four sources of new funding: the Provost's Office, development, internal reallocation, and cash.

Of these, the largest portion of funding comes from the Provost's Office, which currently is not providing any new resources, Roche said. Departments submit an annual report around June 1, and the dean's office then prioritizes those requests in much the same way as the Provost's Office prioritizes requests further up the ladder.

We try to consider several factors, including student demand, i.e. credit hour per faculty member or majors per faculty member, National Resource Council rankings, Catholic identity, and diversity, Roche said.

Additional questions must be asked as well, such as if the department is making good decisions with their current resources and if they are measuring students well.

The end result of this is a prioritization in the request the dean's office sends to the Provost's Office for consideration and possible re-prioritization. This is where much of the discussion and debate takes place, since obviously not all requests can be funded.

Development, often funded by donations of some sort, provides a sizable chunk of resources as well for Arts and Letters, with the unidentified items in the Strategic Plan coming first in those decisions. However, it can rise and fall from year to year, making it somewhat more difficult to predict how to use those funds.

Internal reallocation, or the switching of a faculty line or other resource from one department to another, is fairly minor according to Roche. This does occur fairly regularly, but again, Roche said that the dean's office usually leaves lines in departments, unless there is a reason not to, such as a need that is having problems governing itself or that is no longer highly popular.

The fourth source, cash, is essentially money that the dean has to spend. Out of this, for example, Roche funded undergraduate research grants this past year. However, as far as faculty, the most significant use of this resource is a difficult process, especially in the midst of budget cuts. Nonetheless, all parties feel that it is important that the allocation of resources is equitable and in line with the University's mission, as well as the goals of each college and department, while keeping sight of the students.

"Ultimately, we want to give students the best possible education we can in a way that respects the Catholic tradition." Affleck-Graves said.

According to all the University officials who spoke with The Observer, the process of allocating resources such as faculty lines is a very complex one, and each college and department must make tough decisions about where to allocate resources in order to fulfill the University's mission, as well as the goals of each college and department, while keeping sight of the students.

"Ultimately, we want to give students the best possible education we can in a way that respects the Catholic tradition." Affleck-Graves said.
China will put man in space

BEIJING — China will launch its first human being into space on Oct. 15 in a flight that will last about 90 minutes and will orbit the Earth once, a major Chinese Web site reported, quoting a top government rocketry official.

The comments by Xie Guangxuan, director of the government's China Rocket Design Department, were reported by the Web site Sina.com, China's largest.

"China's space technology has been created by China itself. We started later than Russia and the United States. It's amazing how fast we've been able to accomplish," Xie was quoted as saying. Sina.com said he was "full of confidence" about the launch.

China would become the world's third spacefaring nation. Only the United States and the former Soviet Union have sent manned craft into space.

Iraqi women in democracy

HILLA, Iraq — The U.S. administrator in Iraq told a gathering of Iraqi women Tuesday that they could make a vital contribution to a free and democratic society.

"The work you do will make a difference for years to come," I. Paul Bremer told about 200 women attending a conference on women's rights in Hilla, 40 miles south of Baghdad. "There is indeed hope in Iraq today, and women across the country are working to improve the society."

The audience also heard a videotaped address by National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice, who urged them to take an active role in the rebuilding of Iraq.

Leaker may not be caught

WASHINGTON — President Bush questioned on Tuesday whether investigators would be able to determine who leaked the identity of an undercover CIA officer but said his staff was cooperating. "I want to know the truth," he said.

Bush's chief of staff, Andrew Card, urged some 2,000 White House employees to turn over any relevant documents by Tuesday night. White House lawyers will screen the materials and decide which ones to send to the Justice Department as part of a criminal investigation into the leak, Bush spokesman Scott McClellan said.

Tiger taken from apartment

NEW YORK — The U.S. Justice Department confirmed Tuesday that it had stepped in to seize a tiger from an apartment that6s owner wished he could be reunited with his wild pet.

"I'd love to see my tiger," Antoine Yates said of the 400-pound cat, Ming, as he left state court, released without bail. "He didn't really attack me. He got confused and I got caught in the crossfire."

Yates, 31, faces a charge of reckless endangerment and two counts of possession of a wild animal. Conviction for reckless endangerment carries a sentence of up to seven years.

Judge Melissa Jackson rejected a prosecutor's argument that Yates should be held on $15,000 bail because he lied about his injuries to doctors and then fled.

U.S. supports Israeli raid on Syria

JERUSALEM — Bolstered by U.S. support for Israel's bombing raid in Syria, Prime Minister Ariel Sharon said Tuesday his nation won't hesitate to attack its enemies anywhere — be they Barclaycard offices or camps for Palestinian refugees. "We are not immune to surprises," he said at a memorial service for Israeli soldiers killed during the 1973 Middle East war with Syria and Egypt. "Only if we are ever ready will we reach peace, and we will reach it."

President Bush said Tuesday the Israeli airstrike — the first Israeli attack deep into Syria in three decades — was part of an "essential" campaign to defend the country, and drew a parallel between Sharon's actions and U.S. policy on terrorism.

Do-not-call list made legal

DENVER — A federal appeals court on Tuesday cleared away a hurdle that has kept the government from fully cracking down on telemarketers who contact people on the national do-not-call list.

The 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals temporarily blocked a lower court order barring the Federal Trade Commission from enforcing the registry of more than 50 million numbers.

The court questioned the conclusions of U.S. District Judge Edward Nottingham of Denver, who last year ruled against the telemarketing industry’s free-speech rights by barring calls from businesses but not charities.

Matthew Whitley sued for wrongful termination

ATLANTA — The Coca-Cola Co. has agreed to pay $140,000, and $300,000 for legal fees. He was to receive from being laid off, about $22 million worth of art, according to the Energy Department.

While normal weather would require less fuel to be used compared to last winter, heating costs still would increase by 5 percent on average ($341 for the season) because of higher fuel prices.

Those who heat with oil, a widely used fuel in the Northeast, could see heating bills drop by 8 percent from last year ($927 for the season) if the winter is normal — and if the price of crude oil prices were to stabilize.

Given a colder than normal winter, however, heating oil costs would be expected to jump by as much as 17 percent on average over last winter, to $1,084 for the heating season, officials said. Propane users can expect a slight decline if the weather is normal ($1,094) but could pay 16 percent more than last year ($1,301) in a severe winter.

"There's no second set of books. There is no person who's going to come in here and speak in hush-hush tones about secret payments," Kaufman said.

"How could Mark have been trying to steal when the company's external auditor was aware of everything?" asked Charlie Stillman, Swartz's lawyer.

"The key factor as always in winter heating is the weather," said Guy Caruso, head of the Energy Information Administration, the department's statistical agency, which issued its winter fuels forecast Tuesday.

He said supplies are tight not only for natural gas but as well for propane and petroleum products, including heating oil.

David Terry, managing director of the National Association of State Energy Officials, said after a year of surging natural gas prices, soaring summer gasoline prices, a major electricity blackout and volatile crude oil prices, people are worried about what might come next.

"There's more of a heightened sense of urgency," Terry said. The state officials are responsible for dealing with state energy emergencies. He said the higher fuel costs will affect many people already fighting hard economic times.

Caruso said supplies of natural gas, heating oil and propane should be adequate.

As summer has quickly turned to fall, many students have already begun their search for future career and internship opportunities.

Notre Dame's Career Center and Saint Mary's Career and Counseling Development Center aid students in their searches by bringing a variety of companies to campus for informational meetings and on-campus interviews.

The Career and Counseling Development Center at Saint Mary's invited representatives from Ford Motor Company, General Electric and Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance to visit campus earlier in the semester.

Notre Dame's Business Career Fair, held last month, also attracted a variety of companies including Johnson and Johnson, Price Waterhouse Coopers and the US Securities and Exchange Commission.

However, despite the amount of visiting corporations, some students are finding the search more successful than others. Although many of the companies that have visited campus seem to be geared toward students in business-related fields, more companies with liberal arts backgrounds are slated to come as the year progresses.

"Early recruiting involves mostly business and engineering majors," said Lee Svete, director of Notre Dame's Career Center. "Other majors, such as publishing, advertising and government usually recruit in the spring."

Johnson and Johnson, General Electric and IBM are just a few of the companies scheduled to visit Notre Dame later this semester. Ford Motor Company has already committed to return to Saint Mary's.

"It's early in the season. We build up the list of companies throughout the year so opportunities become available during the fall and spring semesters," said Jeff Roberts, associate director of SMC career opportunities.

Through these systems, students can access career and internship opportunities from companies across the United States. The networks are accessible 24 hours a day and provide students with specific contact information. Students are also able to publish an online resume that can be accessed by potential employers.

Since establishing the Go Belles and Go Irish networks, students can access career and internship opportunities from companies across the United States. The networks are accessible 24 hours a day and provide students with specific contact information. Students are also able to publish an online resume that can be accessed by potential employers.

Hollywood big shot movies
guber and bart promise laughs on new "sunday morning shootout"

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Peter Guber and Peter Bart want you to understand: Their new talk show is called "Sunday Morning Shootout." Not "Shootout."

Guber, a legendary film producer, and Bart, the chief critic of Variety, are dueling co-hosts on "Shootout," which premieres on AMC this Sunday at 11 a.m. EDT.

"We're going to discuss and argue about some of the hot issues that involve the entertainment business, particularly movies," says Bart, who last year collaborated with Guber on "Shoot Out," a book about the business's backstabbing history.

"We have been friends for an alarming number of years and we enjoy our feisty exchanges, so maybe other people will, too," adds Guber, 61, who runs a Hollywood coffee shop where big shots can be found on a Sunday morning (but, oddly enough, not on their cell phones), each "Shootout" will feature a guest — a star, filmmaker or other insider (first up: Edward Norton). There'll be some gossip, maybe a little news.

But no "Tell Me About Your New Film?"

"And no reviews," Bart promises.

"No thumbs-up or thumbs-down. Thumbs will be inactive." "No thumbs-up or thumbs-down. Thumbs will be inactive."

"But there's a reason," grins Guber, whose casual togs strike a contrast to Bart's Saville Row nattiness. "He told me not to wear it. I said, 'Now that I found something you don't like, I'm going to be really active in its pursuit.'"

"Their differences don't end with their apparel. 'I am volatile, emotional,' Guber says. 'He speaks firmly, quietly, deeply, thoughtfully.'"

"But I know that he's dangerous," Bart continues, grinning again as he gestures at Bart. "You have an argument with him, and you leave the table and then you drop dead five blocks away and you don't know why. Me, I pick up a fork and stab you right in the heart while you're sitting here."

"I could be great TV. But Guber makes movies, as well as arguing about them. Isn't he worried that, on public display every week, his candor style might rub the wrong person the wrong way?"

"The reality is, if I have a project that somebody wants to do and they hate me, but the script's really good, they'd do it," he replies.

"But don't mistake defiance for fearlessness."

"I'm at a place in my career where I still have fear, but I'm not fear-filled," he explains. "When I was in my 20s, I thought the world would come crashing to an end if everybody didn't love me. When I was in my 30s, I realized that nobody loved me. And now, I don't care if they love or they hate me, as long as they do the work."

"That's probably including his wife and children," jokes Bart, referring to Lynda, Guber's wife of 36 years, and their four kids.

"Probably does include them," Guber replies with a laugh.

"Probably does include them," Guber replies with a laugh.

FCC: Bono didn't violate decency rules

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — When it comes to cursing, the government says, it's all in the delivery.

That's the view of the Federal Communications Commission in its decision that U2 singer Bono's colorful language during the Golden Globe Awards didn't violate federal indecency rules.

The FCC, using the F-word more often to explain its decision than Bono did on the air, said the word "may be crude and offensive, but, in the context presented here, did not describe sexual or excretory organs or activities." That distinction is a key test to measure whether a statement meets a federal standard for broadcast indecency.

NATO allies expected to take on bigger roles

European nations build peacekeeping efforts

 Associated Press

 COLORADO SPRINGS — America's European allies are expected to offer this week to play a bigger peacekeeping role in Bosnia and Afghanistan, helping U.S. forces stretched by the occupation of Iraq and their fight against al-Qaida.

European nations, firming up plans for both operations at talks ahead of a two-day meeting of NATO defense ministers, which opens Wednesday in this Rocky Mountain city.

NATO also has already asked the United Nations for permission to expand its peacekeeping mission in Afghanistan and move troops beyond the capital, Kabul, into other Afghan cities.

"My top priority is that we get Afghanistan right," NATO Secretary General Lord Robertson told reporters Tuesday. "It's a big responsibility."

NATO currently runs a force of 5,000 — mostly German and Canadian — troops maintaining order and supporting the Afghan authorities in Kabul. The mission is separate from the larger U.S.-led combat mission fighting remnants of al-Qaida and the ousted Taliban regime in the countryside.

Plans under consideration would send more NATO-led troops — possibly up to several thousand — out to other Afghan cities to support civilian reconstruction teams and help extend the authority of the Afghan government in areas currently under control of local warlords.

Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said Washington had supported a wider role for the Kabul force, which operates under a U.N. mandate.

"We've always favored expansion outside Kabul," he said.

However, Robertson has acknowledged that a shortage of properly trained and equipped European troops could limit the scope.

Clark’s campaign manager quits

Presidential candidate loses manager in feud over campaign direction

 Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Wesley Clark’s campaign manager quit Tuesday in a dispute over the direction of the Democratic presidential bid, exposing a rift between the former general’s Washington-based advisers and his 3-week-old Arkansas campaign team.

Donnie Fowler told associates Monday that a growing over widespread concerns that supporters who used the Internet to draft Clark into the race are not being taken seriously by top campaign advisers. Fowler also complained that the campaign’s message and methods are focused too much on Washington, not key states and the burgeoning power of local warlords.

Fowler has complained that while the Internet-based draft-Clark supporters have been integrated into the campaign, their views are not taken seriously by Fabiani, Klein and other top advisers, many of them based in Washington. He has warned Clark’s team that the campaign is threatening to be overly focused on Washington, a charge leveled against Gore’s campaign in 2000.

Fowler, son of former Democratic Party chairman Donna Fowler, was quietly installed as chairman of the campaign in the first days of the bid.

Fowler’s departure is the latest blow for a campaign that has gotten off to mixed reviews.

National polls put Clark near the top of the nine-person field and he raised more than $3 million in the first two weeks of his campaign, a sum that surpassed what several rivals raised in three weeks. However, he has been criticized for flip-flopping on whether he would have supported the Iraq resolution, and his commitment to the Democratic Party has been questioned.

Clark voted for Presidents Reagan and Nixon, praised both Bush administrations and had not registered to vote as a Democrat in his home state of Arkansas before entering the race. The high number of Clinton-Gore officials on his campaign has caused Clark’s rivals to question whether the former president is quietly pushing Clark’s campaign, a charge Clark denies.

The waves of white

This summer, after sifting through the bombardment of Notre Dame e-mails concerning the remarkable diversity of the Class of 2007, I half-expect to arrive on campus to see a rainbow of skin colors joining hands in front of the Golden Dome and singing "We Are the World." On the contrary, one of my very first Notre Dame musical experiences consisted of about a dozen white kids squeezing bagpipes outside of the LaFortune Student Center.

Clearly, this University's definition of diversity bears absolutely no resemblance to that of any contemporary dictionary, which tends to stress words like "difference," "variety" and "mixture." Unfortunately, on a college campus where a large part of a student's education is expected to develop through peer interaction, diversity in the form of Confirmation name, or diversity of any sort, is not seen as a social backdrop for spurring the erudite, multi-ethnic discussions characteristic of a University of such prestige.

The fact that this is a University rich in diversity has still managed to avoid open discussion of the many wonderful stories and experiences that can be found in the traditions of white, male-dominated traditions of white, male-dominated past. However, learning the subtle differences can be enlightening experiences. Consequently, some changes must be made to one of the worst examples of a Notre Dame misnomer — "The Sea of Green." This summer, after sifting through the summer's worth of American President as early as 1874.) Likewise, Notre Dame's decision to admit women in the early 1970s came nearly 100 years after most other major colleges did so. It seems as though this University is always just a little behind the times when it comes to diversification, and the time has come once again for it to either catch up to its competition, or risk falling behind permanently.

According to an excerpt from the Multicultural Student Programs and Services section of the University of Notre Dame, "Art of the Future, we believe variety is the spice of life." Well, if that's the case, then maybe this campus needs a little more Tabasco sauce.

Focus on the present

I'm sitting on South Quad with my back toward Vaux Circle and leaning against the flag pole, my feet and legs stretching straight out in front of me. I take a deep breath and take in what is around me. It is dark and there is no one on the quad but me. Why would there be anyone out at this hour? It's 4 a.m. and I try to push that thought from my head, though, and focus on other things.

The Dome is brilliant tonight, even more so than usual. The majestically serene statue of Mary atop the Dome seems to command the rest of the campus. And for the first time in a while, the stars salt the sky above me as I lean my head up against the cold aluminum. The wind has died down from before into a soft breeze that barely disturbs the trees that line the path up to the Admissions Building. There aren't too many nights like this.

A security officer on a bike rides up to me and asks if I'm OK. Yeah, I say. I just could not get to sleep. Don't let your worries weigh you down, he says, it's not worth it. Thanks officer, I say. I'll try. He rides off back on the decision to come here, more of a self-confusion have dawned on me and the answers are not coming. I know it has to do with the point of eruption. But for whatever reason, I come here sometimes when I cannot do the small things to get there. We need to focus on what there is to do today instead of what there is to do tomorrow or a decade from now.

Like all dreams, my ideas of life were large and without limit. When I was younger, I was going to play in the World Series and be mentioned in the same breath as the Babe and Cobb. I was going to go to break all the records in the book and then be elected president. I had it all figured out. But looking at the Dome right now I am granted a revelation. I see that dreams are only as difficult to achieve as we make them. I become conscious of the fact that the leftier the goals, the more we need to do the small things to get there. We need to focus on what there is to do today instead of what there is to do tomorrow or a decade from now. Reading assignments, eating healthy and taking care of myself are all things that will help me reach my final goal.

Distractions got in my way then and distractions will probably get in my way again, revealing the underbelly of all the leaves on the trees. It's going to rain soon, I predict, but that's no matter. I have work to do. But first, it's time to sleep.

Adam Cahill
A Dome's Outlook

We need to focus on what there is to do today instead of what there is to do tomorrow or a decade from now.

Consider facts carefully

Purdue my Frankness, but Peter Quaranto, in his Oct. 7 column, needs to bring his head down from the clouds and take a glance at the real world.

So Pope John Paul II and John Mearshimer challenge the United States' case for going to war. Does this make the case wrong? I believe the Pope to be a wise, keen and benevolent man, one of my favorites amongst world leaders. But he is aging, and even in the sharpest of men, age takes its toll. Further did he have all of the information? If, as we see, the United States did not, and the United States had extensive security and intelligence networks, how could the Pope? The fact is that despite ensuing problems, some as unemployment, as Quaranto cites, the Iraqi people are free of the oppressive regime. As a Catholic, I see something as some-thing of a justification of the war. But the United States, as a member of the United Nations, it would seem inappropriate that the United States desire to remove Hussein from power, as any member of the UN if it comes down to it.

However, neither the United Nations nor Quaranto seems to agree with this. Sadly, members of the United Nations were more concerned with putting their own concerns ahead of those of the Iraqi people. It seems that, say the French, were more concerned with Iraqi oil than the Iraqi people. And what of the weapons found in Iraq that have been pre-eminently linked to France, though the French deny it? Yes, I will concede that oil was likely a major influence in the American decision to go to war. However, in doing this, the United States would by necessity alleviate the desires of the people by removing Hussein. So we see two similar ideas in which the nations put their own desires above the needs of the Iraqi people. But by carrying out the American's selfish goal, some good was done. So we must decide, which is better, a bad thing that leads to good, or a good thing that leads to continued oppression? I think the former to be the lesser of two evils. But we do not know.

Having said that about the United Nations, how can we trust the organization to give authority over Iraq? With all of its in-fighting and the selfish desires of its members, how can it be said to still even have a strong purpose? I agree with Quaranto in his claim about the problems with the United States continuing as the primary re-builder, but to me this is, sadly, the lesser of two evils.

Quaranto cites a United Nations claim that $40 billion would be enough to end world hunger and provide every child with clean drinking water, basic health care and education. We do see the growing poverty and unemployment in the United States. Here, I do sympathize with his argument. I personally am fiercely anti-free trade, and think our government should be taking more proactive steps to bring jobs back to Americans instead of giving them to foreign workers who suffer from labor abuses by corporations not made accountable for their actions. However, I find one major fault with Quaranto's ideological notion of ending world hunger and disease of those other wonderful earth do we do so in a way that allows other nations to help themselves? I think that Hussein would have let all of the food go to this world, and those people in full quantity without keeping any for himself and his soldiers? Or what about Kim Jong Il? The man is infamous for keep- ing his people in full quantity without keeping any for himself and his soldiers. However, I do not think that Hussein would have let all of the food go to this world, and those people in full quantity without keeping any for himself and his soldiers. Or what about Kim Jong Il? The man is infamous for keeping his people in full quantity without keeping any for himself and his soldiers. However, I do not think that Hussein would have let all of the food go to this world, and those people in full quantity without keeping any for himself and his soldiers. Or what about Kim Jong Il? The man is infamous for keeping his people in full quantity without keeping any for himself and his soldiers.

How have we managed to get food where it is needed? Through force. A case in point is Somalia. While as a military venture toquist General Aideed and his military, as well as competing warlords, the mission was a failure, it was successful in ending the famine affecting such a huge majority of the Somali people. How did we succeed? We sent in troops to defend convoys and provide areas from the warlords. The Somali people were reminiscent of the hands of the many North Koreans starving at the hands of its warlords.

"American English" brings back memories

By LIAM FARRELL
Scene Music Critic

Nick Hornby wrote in his brilliant book 31 Songs that "sometimes, very occasionally, songs and books and pictures express who you are, perfectly. And they don't do this in words or images necessarily; the connection is a lot less direct and more complicated than that." One of the most impressive abilities of music and simple, sometimes incredibly inane rock and pop songs is to transport their listeners back to a specific place and time and allow them to recall exactly how they felt. Day after day, week after week, music is my own personal time machine.

The best songs — the ones that stick with me — are the ones that I can place within a specific time and place. Coldplay's Parachutes, the first side of Pink Floyd's Dark Side of the Moon and R.E.M.'s song ever written has its place on my own personal timeline. Like Hornby's character Rob in High Fidelity, my music collection is less a definition of musical taste than of autobiography.

Last May, I was in the Dublin airport coming back from a semester abroad, and I thought the perfect last purchase in Ireland would be a CD. After glancing through the racks I picked up Idlewild's The Remote Part, an album and an artist I had never heard of. It's always a dangerous proposition to buy something costing over 10 euros on impulse alone, but I gave it a shot.

Once it hit the third track, "American English," I was sold on it. The rest of the album was very good, but that third track instantly transported me back to a day in January from Ireland to New York, and I still listen to that song about once a day — the driving beat, the pulse, the beautiful refrain that promises to "keep singing a song about myself / not some invisible world." Every time I hear that song, I am brought back to the moment I walked through JFK and saw my girlfriend, Caitlin, running toward me after months of being apart, and, in the words of the song, "I won't tell you what this means / cause you already know." Other songs I listen to may be better, and Idlewild will probably never be loved by millions of people, but almost no song can bring me back to better emotions. From hope in "Which Will," love in "Pink Moon," and anxiety in "Horns," Pink Moon does everything an album should — make you feel some sort of emotion.

Pink Moon possesses subterranean musical beauty

By RYAN RAFFERTY
Scene Music Critic

If I were to ask you to name your favorite album of all time, how quickly would you be able to answer? Would you quickly rattie off a widely-accepted classic album like Led Zeppelin's IV, or Pink Floyd's Dark Side of the Moon?

If you're a true music fan, you would have a feeling brand new. There were other albums that followed that criterion, but Nick Drake has always struck that emotional E minor chord in my heart.

Pink Moon clocks in at only 28 minutes — but a delicate and beautiful 28 minutes. It was the final album from a brilliant folk artist who committed suicide shortly after recording this album in his basement. What makes this album so special is the nackedness of the music. The only instruments that appear are Nick's acoustic guitar and his gorgeously melancholy vocals. One song, "Know" is only four notes and an artist I had never heard of. It's incredible subterranean in its musical beauty.

Many will recognize the title track from Pink Floyd's The Remote Part, and I feel like I'm driving down an old country road on a dull autumn Sunday afternoon with people I love. Pink Moon is that kind of album. It will pull at every corner of your heart and make you feel a wide range of emotions. From hope in "Which Will," love in "Pink Moon," and anxiety in "Horns," Pink Moon does everything an album should — make you feel some sort of emotion.

U2's music defines a generation

By REBECCA SANDERS
Scene Music Critic

Like most 15-year-old girls, my absolute favorite song after 15 boy band-filled years of musical development was "Crash" by Dave Matthews Band. Dave Matthews Band fandom was my mature move into what I considered to be "real" music. This newfound appreciation of "real" music, which came directly from my clearly extensive musical expertise, opened up new worlds for me.

Eventually, I turned off my "Today's Hits" radio station and determined to find real music I could truly appreciate. I nobly went out — and borrowed my friend's Beastie Boys and Whitney Houston's Greatest Hits albums. After committing both albums to memory, I still found myself hungry for a deeper level of musical genius than party songs and divas. At this time, I entered an art class composed of a handful of musical connoisseurs, and somewhere between Britney and Metallica, someone played the U2 The Joshua Tree album. Enough said. With the huge rock ballads "With or Without You," "I Still Haven't Found What I'm Looking For" and "Where the Streets Have No Name," I became an instant fan.

Since my initial life-changing experience of U2, I have only become more and more addicted to the Irish band that fills stadiums without a second thought. "All That You Can't Leave Behind" came out right as my addiction began to peak. While this is slightly glorified, in all seriousness, I believe that U2 has been the defining band of our time. They are one of the few bands today known worldwide, and as much as they hate this comparison, they are The Beatles of our generation. Not only do they write amazing and groundbreaking music, but they also use their fame for the improvement of the world at large. Political activists from the start, U2 strives to bring peace to the world through their art form. They are great men, and the band of our time.

Service opportunities have the power to transform lives: Fr. Lies

By Father Bill Lies

Through the years, thousands of students have taken part in the diverse opportunities offered through the Center for Social Concerns and our many partners. Each student has made an important difference. Very often these students' service involvement, and the learning that comes through and with it, has transformed them. In turn, their transformation allows each of them to be ever more impressive agents of transformation and/or goodness within others' lives and within communities. These students continue to reach out long after their time at Notre Dame, Saint Mary's and Holy Cross College.

I invite you to consider ways that you might begin right here and now to be a part of that you might begin right here and now to be a part of experience as it impacts community.

The Guide to Community Service
...Transforming power

The Center for Social Concerns invites you to push the boundaries of your classroom into the neighborhoods of South Bend and beyond. Come and enter the lives of those who live and study and work there. Jesus called love the greatest of all commandments—so love the Lord God with all our hearts and to love our neighbor as ourselves (Mark 12: 28-31). It is not easy but it remains no less our challenge and call. It is the foundation on which we will build the justice we seek and the peace we long for.

Be a part of the transformation we are called to, and be transformed. Give yourself away. One or more of the opportunities on these pages could quite possibly change you forever.

...Enriching experience

other situations the elderly may need assistance or companionship. “There are so many needs—and by extension—so many opportunities to help,” said Cahill Kelly. “There really is something each student can do to help.”

Service & Learning

It is also clear that being of service goes both ways for the student. Cahill Kelly explains that often volunteering is a chance to broaden their education. They have a chance to learn new skills as well as utilize the skills they are developing in their courses,” says Cahill Kelly.

For the student, service work provides an opportunity to build relationships and affect the lives of others as well as their own. There are countless stories out there of students who have been changed by their service experiences. Many have learned that service is rewarding because experiences. Many have learned that service is rewarding because relationships and affect the lives of others.

It is not easy but it remains no less our challenge and call. It is the foundation on which we will build the justice we seek and the peace we long for.

There are certain moments in my life that would be entirely forgettable were it not for the music playing in the background. That may sound strange to some of you, but I am almost certain that anyone who truly loves music can remember at least one such experience. I can remember the very first time I encountered Radiohead’s The Bends. Sitting in front of my computer, sending IMs to my friends on AOL (as I can often be found doing today), I decided to pop in the CD that I had recently borrowed from a friend. As I continued typing, the music I had intended to be mere background noise began to assert itself more and more into my consciousness. Soon, I found that I was unable to force it into the background, and not only that, but I was also unable to let the album play past the fourth track with the intent of shutting it off again. I was so taken with the music I heard that I kept playing “High and Dry” and “Fake Plastic Trees” over and over again. Luckily, when I had finally had my temporary fill of those two songs, I was able to listen to the album in its entirety and immediately christened it my new favorite, a title that it retains to this day. There is some unexplainable quality in Thom Yorke’s voice that drives his emotion into the ears of listeners, even though he is not what we might call a conventionally “talented” vocalist. “High and Dry” is one of those songs that can make you want to cry even if you are in a good mood.

Radiohead’s Pinkerton, a heartfelt release

By BRIAN FOY

Weezer’s Pinkerton was heartfelt and true before guys like John Mayer ruined the entire genre by taking it way too far. Rivers proves you can be emotional and developing a cult status. Weezer’s Pinkerton is not only the best album you’ve never heard, but it’s also my favorite album.

Cleveland's LeBron James dunked the balls in the Cavs 100-96 victory over Detroit Tuesday night in an exhibition game. James had several impressive passes during his first game.

James tucked in his shirt, then called the rookie for the fourth quarter "passer's response." James shrugged off the call, similar to his non-responsiveness in the fourth quarter when he tried to draw a charge against rookie Drew Duree but Crawford whistled a blocking foul instead. "I just want to see what he's going to bring to the table. There's a lot of hype around him," said Detroit's Ben Wallace. Heatley allowed to attend teammate Snyder’s funeral

Associated Press

DULUTH, Ga. — Atlanta Thrashers All-Star Dany Heatley will be allowed to travel to Canada for the funeral of teammate Dan Snyder, who died of head injuries sustained when Heatley’s sports car crashed.

Charges against Heatley were upgraded to vehicular homicide Monday, one day after Snyder’s death and a week after the accident.

“He’s an emotional wreck,” said Heatley’s attorney, Ed Garland. “He’s grieving the tragic death of Dan Snyder. That’s been almost his entire focus.”

Magistrate Richard Hicks on Tuesday cleared the way for Heatley to attend Snyder’s service Friday in Elmira, Ontario, with the rest of the team. The judge also signed a consent bond adding the upgraded charge.

Heatley will remain free on the $50,000 bond he posted on lesser charges filed shortly after the Sept. 29 crash, said a spokesman in Hick’s office.

Snyder died Sunday at a hospital, where he had been in a coma since the crash. He was 25.

A police officer looks at the car that killed Thrasher player Dan Snyder. Dany Heatley wrecked the vehicle last week, killing his teammate in the crash. He will be allowed to attend the funeral.

Heatley will remain free on his $50,000 bond. He is free on a $50,000 bond.

A spokesman for the district attorney’s office, Erik Friedly, said the vehicular homicide charge was based on a preliminary finding that Heatley was driving recklessly. It carries a prison sentence of three to 15 years.

General manager Don Waddell said team officials held internal discussions about possibly delaying Thursday night’s season opener, but the Snyder family persuaded them to play.

“When I talked to the Snyder family, they really expressed their concern for the team and how we move forward,” Waddell said at a news conference at the team’s headquarters in suburban Atlanta. “They really felt the team needed to play.

The Thrashers open the season Thursday against the Columbus Blue Jackets. Last season, Heatley scored a team-record 41 goals and was MVP of the All-Star game.

Heatley also faces four misdemeanor counts, each of which are punishable by up to a year in prison. He is free on $50,000 bond.

“We are overwhelmingly saddened and distraught over this tragic loss,” the Heatley family said in a statement released by the Thrashers. “Dan was a genuine and caring individual, and a tremendous friend to us all.

“Our deepest sympathies and compassion go out to his parents and their entire family.”

Police said Heatley was driving his Ferrari at about 80 mph on a narrow two-lane road when he lost control, spun off the road and smashed into a brick and wrought iron fence.

Heatley’s case has yet to be presented to a grand jury, which would decide on the formal charges. Friedly said. Prosecutors are waiting for more evidence before taking their case to the grand jury.

Police were also awaiting test results to determine if Heatley was drinking on the night of the wreck. There is “no conclusive indication” that Heatley was drinking, Friedly said.

Heatley and Snyder had been at an event for season-ticket holders at Philips Arena shortly before the crash.

Snyder, a center who had 10 goals and four assists in 36 games for Atlanta last season, had surgery on his ankle in September before the start of training camp. He was expected to start the season on the injured list.

Snyder signed with the Thrashers as an undrafted free agent in 1999 after playing four seasons of junior hockey for Owen Sound in the Ontario Hockey League.

How many undrafted guys make it to the NHL? Not many,” Waddell said. “He had to work his way into the lineup to play in the minor leagues. The second half of last year, he really proved he was ready to be an NHL player.”
McGahee passes physical, will return to Bills

BUFFALO, N.Y. — Bills rookie Willis McGahee passed a physical on his injured left knee Tuesday, one of the final steps that would allow the running back to begin practicing as early as next week.

John Uribe conducted the physical in Miami. Uribe is the University of Miami team physician who surgically repaired the three torn ligaments McGahee sustained during the Hurricanes' loss to Ohio State in the Fiesta Bowl last January.

"He's ready to play," Uribe said. "He's worked pretty hard to get back to where he is and the fact that his biology cooperated is pretty amazing. He looks very good."

McGahee's agent, Drew Rosenhaus, was excited by the findings, and said the results all but clear the way for his client to begin practicing.

"It was a successful visit and he's on his path to an amazing recovery," Rosenhaus said. "There doesn't appear to be any reason not to go ahead."

Rosenhaus said the Bills approved McGahee's exam in Miami, and that Uribe was passing along the results to the team's training staff.

The final step for McGahee's return is getting clearance from Bills team doctor John Marzo. Bills president Tom Donahoe declined to comment on the test results.

"We will offer a comment when Willis has been cleared by our doctors for practice," Donahoe said.

The findings back up the results of the Bills' most recent tests, which showed McGahee's injured knee to be between 90 and 92 percent rehabilitated.

Uribe said the most important measure was comparing the strength in McGahee's injured leg to his healthy one.

"I would like to see more mass in his [injured] leg, but it was pretty close to normal," Uribe said. "His strength certainly measured proportional to his other knee. He's not going to be in any danger because of that, so it's OK for him to play."

McGahee, selected 23rd overall, opened the season on the reserve nonfootball injury list. The earliest he could take the field is next week, after the Bills (3-2) travel to play the Jets on Sunday.

NFL rules bar a player on the injured list from practicing until between Week 6 and 9. Once McGahee begins practicing, the Bills would have three weeks to determine whether to place him on the active roster.

Because of his long rehabilitation, McGahee is expected to require at least two weeks of practice before the Bills would consider using him in a game.

McGahee has spent the last two months working out on his own while being limited to watching practice from the sideline. The most he has been allowed to do is catch passes in a stationary position.

"There doesn't appear to be any reason not to go ahead."

Bryant considers waiving initial hearing

Associated Press

EAGLE, Colo. — Attorneys in the Kobe Bryant case huddled with the judge Tuesday but didn’t answer the biggest question: Will the NBA star waive his preliminary hearing to keep potentially damaging evidence from being heard publicly?

That decision might not be made until minutes before Thursday’s hearing, where prosecutors will present evidence they say proves Bryant raped a young hotel worker in his room at a mountain lodge on June 30.

Though everyone involved in the case has been silenced by a gag order, many legal analysts expect the defense to waive the preliminary hearing and acknowledge there is enough evidence for a judge to order a trial.

“If they have the hearing the public is going to hear basically all the details of what happened that night and it’s going to be told from the prosecution’s perspective,” said Karen Steinhauser, a former prosecutor and law professor at the University of Denver. “There’s a lot of unfavorable evidence going to be brought out in public.

Another reason for waiving the hearing is that the defense has little to gain, said Denver defense attorney Dan Recht.

“There’s no way the defense will win a preliminary hearing. No way,” Recht said.

Even if the hearing is waived, Bryant must appear Thursday before Judge Frederick Gannett, free on $25,000 bail, would also at some point have to appear in another court to enter a plea to the sexual assault charge.

Bryant was in Hawaii this week, where the Los Angeles Lakers were training and playing their first exhibition games. The basketball star’s attorneys met earlier in the day with prosecutors and Gannett for more than an hour, discussing what a court spokeswoman called logistical issues.

Exiting the courtroom, Gannett wouldn’t comment. Earlier, he said he didn’t expect the issue of waiving the preliminary hearing to come up.

Attorneys were to meet with the judge once more Thursday, just 45 minutes before the hearing, to resolve other issues. At that point, defense attorneys could move to waive the hearing and take their chances at trial.

Prosecutors planned to bring a sheriff’s detective to the stand at the preliminary hearing to discuss the investigation and the conclusions reached by a nurse who examined Bryant’s accuser.

“They don’t stand to gain a whole lot by having it,” Steinhauser said.

Bryant’s attorneys haven’t had much success in front of Gannett so far. They have already lost efforts to get the alleged victim’s medical and psychological records, and on Monday Gannett ruled they cannot have access to notes taken by a rape crisis center worker during an interview with the accuser.

Eagle County authorities, meanwhile, moved ahead with preparations for Bryant’s second court visit, which appears likely to generate the same circus-like atmosphere as his first appearance Aug. 6.

Bryant uttered just two words during that seven-minute hearing, which brought out dozens of his supporters and created a media frenzy the likes of which this quiet mountain town had never seen.

The Treaty on European Union (Maastricht Treaty) was signed on December 11, 1991, it entered into force after ratification by member states on November 1, 1993. This treaty was a major overhaul of the founding treaties that had established cooperation among some Western European countries beginning in the 1950s. It created the “three pillar” European Union that exists today.

U.S. women focus on Canada, 2004 Olympics

Loss to Germany disappoints team as they look towards their next chance

BEAVERTON, Ore. — Barring a massive youth movement, the World Cup is not the end for Mia Hamm and the other 30-somethings who make up the core of U.S. women’s soccer roster.

There could still be a triumphant finale next year in Athens.

“With the Olympics just 10 months away, if you believe that we need to get rid of some of these older players, clean house and go younger, then I think it’s a mistake,” U.S. coach April Heinrichs said Tuesday. “It’s really a mistake.”

The Americans went through a spirited workout at the Nike World Campus on Tuesday, singing “Happy Birthday” to 29-year-old Shannon MacMillan, then taking turns kicking soccer balls at her as she bent over in front of the net.

The team will leave Wednesday to prepare for its third-place World Cup match against Canada on Saturday in Carson, Calif.

“Right now we have a very recent goal of beating Canada and leaving this World Cup with our heads held as high as we can hold them,” Abby Wambach said. “There’s a lot of pride in still being in the World Cup right now, and there’s a lot of pride going into the next 10 months of our preparation for the Olympics.”

Hamm would have nothing to do with any Olympic talk, not with Canada to play.

“I don’t want to assume that I’m part of anything next year,” she said. “I can’t control that right now. All I can do is focus on our task at hand and that’s the consolation game on Saturday against Canada. I mean, that’s going to take our full concentration.”

Hamm had an ice pack on one knee. When asked if she was all right, she nodded yes, then added, “Haven’t you read? We’re old.”

She was not smiling.

The idea that this is a team with too many players past their prime does not sit well in the aftermath of Sunday’s 3-0 semifinal loss to Germany that ended any chance of repeating as World Cup champion.

“Some people say that we have old-timers on this team,” said the 23-year-old Wambach, one of the brightest young stars in international soccer. “But if you ask anybody in this organization, in the federation, there’s no way that we even put them in an old-timer sentence. Just because you’re a veteran, doesn’t mean you’re an old-timer and that you don’t have the stuff.”

Hamm is 32 and has said she will retire after Athens. Brandi Chastain is 35 and is recovering from a broken foot. She wants a shot at the Olympic team, too. Joy Fawcett is 35. Briana Scurry, Julie Foudy and Kristine Lilly all are 32. They all want to go for another Olympic gold.

“For some of them it’s going to be their last go-round for an international event,” Wambach said. “I think that’s going to be all the more motivation.”

Wambach makes no secret she expects her older teammates to be around for a big finish next year.

Scandals leave English football reeling

Associated Press

LONDON—English football has been left reeling by a string of scandals which threaten to rip up the foundations of the game's unprecedented growth over the last decade.

Allegations that a group of Premiership players were involved in the gang rape of a 17-year-old high school student have been followed by a series of revelations that will repel both traditional fans and the new wave of middle-class supporters who have helped to underpin the football boom.

In the space of barely 24 hours, it emerged that England defender Rio Ferdinand had skipped a doping test, Newcastle striker Craig Bellamy was convicted of affray in connection with an alleged gang rape of a 17-year-old in a London hotel at the end of last month.

But one of the men involved in the alleged attack has claimed the girl consented to sex with several men, a practice he described as "roast"ing and said was commonplace among Premiership players.

Ferdinand's claim was the victim of a simple oversight. Bellamy was acquitted of being drunk and disorderly and two Leeds players were questioned by police in connection with a serious sexual assault.

Ferdinand claims he was the victim of a simple oversight. Bellamy was acquitted of more serious charges that he had racially abused a night-club doorman and the investigation into the Leeds players is only in its preliminary stages.

But football chiefs have been powerless to contain a wave of repulsion and concern over the huge wealth bestowed upon young players and the resulting hedonistic, irresponsible, sub-culture which is seen as contributing to such unsavoury incidents.

Even a relatively unknown player in the Premiership can count on an annual income in the region of one million pounds. Stars can command up to five times that amount, thanks in large part to the huge television revenues English football generates around the world.

Police have yet to charge anyone in connection with the alleged gang rape of a 17-year-old in a London hotel at the end of last month.

CHICAGO — Mike Lowell sure wrecked this Wrigley Field party in a hurry.

With the old ballpark still shaking after Sammy Sosa's tremendous, tying home run with two outs in the ninth inning, Lowell led off the 11th with a pinch-hit home run that sent the Florida Marlins over the Chicago Cubs 9-8 Tuesday night in the NL championship series opener.

"It just kept going back and forth. Weird," Lowell said. "It was kind of like a boxing match.

In a game featuring seven homers, four triples and six doubles, Sosa's two-run shot was clearly the most dramatic. He finally delivered a big postseason hit, and when the ball landed beyond the left-field wall, it turned a packed Waveland Avenue into Bedlam Boulevard.

"We didn't celebrate, for sure," Marlins manager Jack McKeon said. "I think there was a pause right there." Too bad for the Cubs, Lowell's drive won it. He had help, too — playoff star Ivan Rodriguez homered and drove in five runs for Florida.

"That's playoff baseball," Cubs manager Dusty Baker said. "It was full of emotional twists. I'm sure everyone is emotionally exhausted."

"It's disheartening. We had an opportunity to win the game," he said. "Bad we came out on the short end, very sad."

An All-Star third baseman, Lowell missed almost all of the final four weeks because of a broken left hand, and has played sparingly in the postseason. He was ready for his first pinch-hitting appearance this year, batting for winning pitcher Ugueth Urbina and launching a drive over the center-field wall off Mark Guthrie. The sellout crowd of 39,567 started rocking early as Moises Alou homered in a four-run first. But the Marlins, who posted three comeback wins over San Francisco in the opening round, stormed back when Rodriguez, rookie Miguel Cabrera and Juan Encarnacion homered in a five-run third.

"These guys don't quit, and it was very evident today," McKeon said.

Brad Lenop pitched the 11th for a save, giving the Marlins a win and a nice omen. The last 10 teams to win the NLCS opener have reached the World Series.

In Brief

Detroit Lions lose Rogers

DETROIT — Charles Rogers will not be around to help the Detroit Lions break out of their slump.

The rookie receiver broke his right collarbone in practice Tuesday and is expected to miss at least a month. Rogers, the No. 2 overall pick in the draft, got tangled up with cornerback Dre' Bly, landed on his shoulder and has played sparingly in the postsea­son.

"I told Dre' Bly it wasn't his fault," Detroit coach Steve Mariucci said. "It happens sometimes when guys compete. We do the best we can as players and coaches to minimize it, but it's a contact sport."

The Lions have lost four straight games since Rogers scored two touchdowns in the season-opening game against Arizona. Rogers leads the Lions with 22 receptions for 243 yards and three TDs in five games.

With Rogers out, Mariucci said Az-Zahir Hakim, Bill Schroeder, Scotty Anderson and Shawn Jefferson will have to pick up the slack. Hakim and Schroeder, who signed with Detroit as free agents last year, have combined for just 20 receptions.

"I told the team after practice when somebody is out for a while, somebody or some group of players have to make up for that," Mariucci said.

Injuries have also sidelined Detroit's top running back, James Stewart, kick returner Eddie Drummond and the team's No. 2 and 3 cornerbacks, Chris Cash and Andre Goodman.

NCAA to move college 3-point line

INDIANAPOLIS — The 3-point line in college basketball is about to be moved 9 inches farther from the basket beginning in the 2004-05 season.

Barring unexpected dissent by the NCAA's two smallest divisions, the new line will be set at 20 feet, 6 inches.

The championships committees of all three divisions decided to keep the rectangular free throw lane, rejecting a switch to the trapezoidal lane used internationally.

"In Division I, it's essentially done," Marty Benson, the NCAA liaison to the basketball rules committee, said Tuesday.

"In Division II and III, the management councils have to look at it and either approve what the championships committee did or change what the championships committee did." Earlier this year, South Carolina coach Dave Odum, a rules committee member, said the extra 9 inches might discourage marginal shooters from taking longer shots.

"That would make the shot more meaningful," he said.

The management councils meet Oct. 21-22. If they agree, the changes in all three divisions will take effect in the 2004-05 season. If they don't, the matter will be decid­ed by the NCAA executive committee Oct. 31.

Rivera rocks the postseason

Associated Press

NEW YORK — When the New York Yankees have their way, all that postseason pressure is left in the delicately thin fingers of one man’s right hand.

Mariano Rivera rarely disappoints.

‘It’s a good feeling. That’s why you’re the closer. Otherwise, you wouldn’t be doing that job,’ he said.

The Yankees have counted heavily on Rivera throughout their run of four World Series titles and five pennants in the past seven years. They expect him to do that job when ever he’s in the back of teams’ minds when you know he’s sitting there in that bullpen. Right now, he’s throwing the ball as well as he has thrown in all of the years I’ve been here.”

That’s a scary thought for the Red Sox, who have seen plenty of Rivera over the years and know how dominant he can be. After starting the season on the disabled list with a strained right groin, he converted 40 of 46 save chances and ended the year with a career-best 1.66 ERA. He did not allow a run in his last 15 appearances.

“I think every starter on the staff is glad that Mo is back at the back of the bullpen and throwing the ball the way he’s been throwing it,” said Mike Mussina, who will start Game 1 against knuckleballer Tim Wakefield. “We know if we can get to the ninth inning with a lead, we’ll take our chances out there with him every single time.”

Often in October, Torre won’t even wait until the ninth to go to Mo — especially this season with New York’s shaky setup situation. The four-time All-Star had a pair of two-inning saves in the first round against Minnesota, further demonstrating his ability to turn it up under postseason pressure. Rivera retired all 12 Twins he faced, extending his postseason record for career saves to 27.

The right-hander converted 23 consecutive postseason save opportunities before taking the loss in Game 7 of the 2001 World Series against Arizona, and he once pitched a record 33 1-3 straight scoreless innings in postseason play.
Junior righthander John Axford and specialist Alison Shevik were singled out a few players whenever we started to get down. “It just shows how much we’ve grown as a team since then,” Outside hitter Kristen Playko led the team with 30 kills and also added 18 digs. Defensive specialist Alton Sherik was the team leader with 33 digs. “She was just on fire tonight,” Schroeder-Biek said of Playko, who made only five hitting errors in 82 attempts. The Saint Mary’s coach also singled out a few players whose contributions didn’t necessarily show on the final statistics sheet. “Outside attacker Ann Carpenter didn’t have her best game statistically [five kills], but she really sent Calvin scurrying with a lot of her hits and didn’t give them time to set up their defense,” Schroeder-Biek said. “Middle hitter Shelly Bender also had a great night. A lot of Kristen [Playko]’s success was because of Shelly’s fakes, which would give Kristen more options.”

The Belles have five more conference games remaining before the end of the season, but their coach believes that if they can play like they did Tuesday, they will win a lot of those matches. “I really think we’re going to do some good things the second half,” Schroeder-Biek said. “We just need to gain some more confidence and keep playing to get better in the future.”

Saint Mary’s travels to the Tri-State Triangular Saturday, where they will face non-conference opponents Tri-State University and the University of Michigan-Dearborn.

Thaman gets win in Blue/Gold scrimmage

Senior lefthander Joe Thaman — Notre Dame’s starting first baseman during the past three seasons and an accomplished high school pitcher — had a solid outing to pick up the victory in Tuesday’s opening game of the annual Blue/Gold Intrasquad scrimmage at Eck Stadium.

Thaman yielded five hits and no walks while striking out three batters in his maximum four innings, staking the Blue team to a 2-1 lead.

The Blue then tacked on seven unearned runs in the sixth and held off a rally by the Gold for the 9-7 victory. Wednesday’s starting pitchers will include junior righthander John Axford for the Blue and freshman righthander Derik Olvey for the Gold.

Irish finish 15th at tournament

GLENVIEW, Ill. — The Notre Dame men’s golf team wound up in a tie for 15th place at the Windon Memorial Classic, which concluded Tuesday at the par-72, 7,058-yard North Shore Country Club in Glenview, Ill., just north of Chicago.

The tournament, which was hosted by Northwestern University, featured eight of the top 50 teams in the nation, according to the latest Golfweek/Sagarin Performance Index rankings, led by No. 10 Minnesota and No. 25 California.

The Irish fired a final-round 302 on Tuesday, highlighted by an even-par 72 from sophomore Scott Gustafson and a 1-over par 73 from freshman Cole Isban.

Notre Dame finished the tournament with a score of 909, tying them with SMU for 15th place. Minnesota won the event with a 5-under par 859 team score, nine shots clear of Purdue and California.

Individually, the Irish were strong in their top two positions. Gustafson was the top finisher for Notre Dame, placing in a tie for 11th overall with a career-low score of 1-over par 217.

His previous best 54-hole total was 219, which he set at the 2002 Kansas Invitational. Gustafson’s score in relation to par also was the best of his career.

The Irish are still confident in the running game. But Willingham just sees that as one aspect of the running game they need to improve to start winning games.

"On occasions, if you have to endure (second-and-long situations) to give you an opportunity to be successful, yes [we are willing to do that]," he said. "Because no one scores or gains when you throw one incompletion. But if you have one run of less than three or four yards, then the whole - and coaches are the same way - the world is, 'Gosh, they're in a downside.'"

The Irish are still confident that they have the tools to become a dominant rushing team. Even with an inexperienced offensive line, Notre Dame has a pair of talented running backs in a Julius Jones and Ryan Grant.

"We're only going to go as far as our running game goes," Grant said. "I'm adamant about that. We have a very talented backfield, and I think everyone knows we have a very talented backfield. It just shows that once we get things going how dynamic we can be as a team."

For now, the Irish are committed to running the ball and running it effectively. Even if the passing game puts up hundreds of yards on its own, the Irish know they will see little success until they can move the ball on the ground first.

"You have to be able to run the ball to make things happen in college football," Grant said.

Butler 18-0 while scoring twice more. Senior Amy Warner scored the first goal on a breakaway after taking the pass from freshman Jeni Buckowski.

"Warner is one of those players I want to get rest for," said Waldrum. "But if our pressing isn't working right, she and Mary Boland do such a great job at creating havoc for the other team and making an effort by the effort. Tonight she was responsible for two of the goals and for probably six or eight other opportunities. I can't say enough about her; she's really been the best for forwards in the country."

Willingham also set up the final goal for the Irish. Her shot from close range on the left side was deflected off of two Butler players before ending up in the net. After a discussion, the goal was credited to the team instead of Warner because of the deflection.

In addition to the offense, the Irish defense again did not let their streak of allowing two or fewer shots on goal in each of their last 10 games. After getting two early shots, the Bulldogs did not sniff the net in the last 75 minutes of action.

"With Tancredi and Christie Shaner and Vanessa Pruzinsky back there they've been very good," said Waldrum. "Tancredi is just a player of the week, you could give her any week and justify it. She's playing on another level right now."

"We have a lot of communication," said Tancredi. "We're all on the same page."

Belles pound Olivet in impressive fashion

Observer Staff Report

The Saint Mary's soccer team got off to a quick start and never looked back in its 4-0 blanking of Olivet Tuesday night.

"The team played a solid game where we dictated the pace and controlled the offensive half field throughout the majority of the game," Belles coach Peter Warner said. "I am happy with the overall play of the team after this game and it was good to give some bench players quality field time towards the end of the match."

Wendy Irvin scored in the 13th minute from the assist of Ashley Hinton. Irvin took the ball and fired it from just inside the penalty box area.

The Belles were held scoreless for the rest of the first half, but exploded in the second half to put the game out of reach for Olivet.

In the 53rd minute, Jen Concannon shot a low ball into the corner of the net to give her team a 2-0 edge. In the 79th minute, the Belles continued to pour it on with another goal by freshman Megan Mackenzie. Finally Katie Green scored in the 86th minute to finish the scoring and give the Belles the 4-0 win."

"It was nice to see some of our bench players come off the bench and contribute in the scoring," Warner said. "Green and Mackenzie combined for the final two goals and they worked well with each other."

Overall, Haring was pleased with the effort of his team.

"We used our outside players more during this game than we have during our last two outings and it showed because we had so many good shot opportuni­ties in front of the goal," he said.

The Irish are still confident that they have the tools to become a dominant rushing team. Even with an inexperi-

taking advantage of a rough tackle penalty by the Pangborn defense during a fourth-down conversion with time expiring.
On the final play of the half,
Koski completed a short 2-yard touchdown pass to Lauren Gianuzzi. Again, the conversion failed.

The Phoxes did not have to wait long to regain the lead, as Koski threw a pass right into the hands of Riemersma, who ran the interception back 15 yards for the score. Pangborn completed the 2-point conversion suc­cessfully.

Most of the second half was a defensive struggle, until the very end when Farley threatened to tie the game. The Finest began an offensive drive with the ball, with several long passes to Kent.

receivers during the drive and

“We did everything well tonight,” Purple Weasel defensive line Hannah Francis said.
“Our defense was fantastic and we had some great stands right when we needed them. Everyone on defense we’ve never played this well.”

Starting the game with the ball, Paquerrilla West ran a seven-play, 65-yard drive as Schmidt picked apart the cavalanuah defense and found receiver Alyssa Howell on a five­ yard slant for the score.

“I started on the left outside and did a drag across the mide­dle,” Howell said. “Leslie put a perfect pass right into my arms.”

Schmidt hit receiver Maureen
Spring for the conversion, spot­ting Paquerrilla West a 7-0 lead.

The quick score proved to be instrumental in catalyzing the dominating performance for the traditionally slow-starting Purple Weasels.

“We haven’t scored on our first drive all year,” Schmidt said. “It usually takes us a while to get moving, but today we just picked it up, kept marching down the field and punched it right in.”

After the Purple Weasels failed to convert a key interception near midfield into points, Paquerrilla West forced cavalanuah to punt on their game possession at its own 35-yard line.

Stringing together yet another impressive drive, the Purple
Weasels converted a pair of third downs as well as a fourth-and­ goal from the five-yard line, as Schmidt hit three different receivers during the drive and ultimately connected with Laurie
Leito for the touchdown.

“Those who look for beauty, find it.”
