When 2004 Junior Parents Weekend chairperson Meg Harty’s father was a junior at Notre Dame in 1961, JPW was nothing like the extravaganza it is today — in fact, he “barely remembers it,” Harty said.

That didn’t stop him, though, from telling his daughter about the 52-year-old tradition. Since her freshman year, Harty and her parents have been planning and thinking about their own JPW experience.

But the more they talked, the more it became clear that there was nothing like the JPW experience.

ND students launch Operation Rice Bowl

By ANNA GEHLHAUS
News Writer

Operation Rice Bowl is coming to Notre Dame this Lent, giving students a chance to donate to the work of Catholic Relief Services.

Sponsored primarily by the Sophomore Class Council, it is the first time in recent memory that the program will be held on campus, according to Brin Anderson and Julia Miller-Lemon, co-chairs of the program.

Operation Rice Bowl is a program of donation throughout Lent. Participants receive a small box and are encouraged to donate change to the bowl throughout the season.

“It is so easy,” Miller-Lemon said. “At this campus, especially, we don’t realize how much we have. With the rice bowls, students can make an impact every day.”

Seventy-five percent of the donations will go to Catholic Relief Services projects in Notre Dame’s Institute for Educational Initiatives.

Junior Parents Weekend

Junior Parents Weekend begins today, launching three days of events aimed at Notre Dame’s juniors and their parents.

But what about the other 6,000 undergraduates? Although she’s a senior, Ana Farach can’t escape the weekend, which draws thousands of parents from around the country.

“My boyfriend is a junior, so I’ll be eating dinner with his parents at some point,” Farach said.

With a new president and several new buildings, change is the buzz for the Board of Trustees on the Saint Mary’s campus through Friday night.

As part of the Board’s visit, student trustee Sarah Mahoney sat in on the Facilities and Grounds and Student Life committee meetings Thursday.

Facilities and Grounds focused on updating the trustees on the several construction projects.

“All projects are looking great, and the student apartments are becoming a reality,” Mahoney said.

After witnessing the visible progress of the student center and apartments, the trustees are excited to see students enjoy them, she said.

“I think the students are going to love the new buildings, and they will be a great recruiting tool for prospective students,” Mahoney said. These buildings represent the Board of Trustees’ commitment to student life and success.”

IDENTITY CRISIS

It's only normal for the college student to be caught in some sort of identity crisis. But I wonder, is the same degree of self-uncertainty permissible for the administration of a university?

Initially, you may ask, "Can an institution even have an identity crisis?" I propose two key words that will clear the matter up immensely: "academic freedom." "Academic freedom" is a 50 cent phrase that will buy you a better ranking in U.S. News. Want to compete with Ivy League schools? You had better be hosting sexually explicit theatre presentations, selling the most controversial books written by pro-abortion activists that we should neither be "academic" nor "free" at this University? Not in the mood of a secular society only diminishes what Notre Dame stands for, leading to inherent contradictions.

Let me provide some concrete examples.

In one breath, we are told that certain politically charged events - I don't believe I have to name the two most recent - will be allowed on campus in the name of "academic freedom.

Shortly before one of the productions, however, the administration was forced to remove a provocative "advertising" display for the production from LaFortune. I suppose if we can't have Notre Dame women parading around in bikinis tops in a public forum, we should just put them in student season tickets. (I think you get my point...)

Likewise, the Queer Film Festival slipped in under the guise of "academic freedom," as well. Never mind the fact that these films presented propaganda explicitly contrary to Catholic teaching. So what is my point? Am I advocating that we neither be "academic" nor "free" at this University? Not in the least.

In fact, by denying conformity to the campus culture, we reject respectability of the secularism. I suggest that we could be freer to embrace our true identity through a sincere and respectful look at our definitively Catholic heritage.

Mostly to discuss homosexual issues during this current wave of unrest in our nation? Attend the symposium panel discussion examining the government's regulation of traditional and same-sex marriage unions to be held Feb. 25 at 6 p.m. in the Erick Visitor's Center Auditorium. This panel will feature three speakers presenting three different approaches to the issue.

Surely such a dialogue requires a strong adherence to "academics" as well as to "freedom of speech."

Woman fined for registering cows to vote

LONDON -- Brenda Gould is in trouble again for registering her cows as voters.

For the second year running, the woman from Newmarket, near Cambridge in eastern England, has listed two names on the registration form that turned out to be cows. East Cambridgeshire District Council said Thursday.

The previous year, in addition to registering two cows as "Henry and Sophie Bull," she listed "Jake Woffles," later found to be a dog, as eligible to vote in local government elections, the council said.

This year she indicated that her address had been split into two properties, that she resided in one part and that two other persons lived in the second, a council spokesman said. The persons she claimed lived in the second property were, in fact, her cows.

Man plans topless coffee shop in Maine

MADISON — Tired of the same old Starbucks and Dunkin' Donuts? The Madison Planning Board tonight takes up a man's application to open a topless coffee shop on Main Street.

Normand St. Michel says his plan to employ partially nude waitresses is intended to boost the establishment's chances of success. He says the idea is to do something different to attract coffee drinkers.

St. Michel says he also wants to run a clean business in which no alcohol will be sold.

SMC RHA wins school of the year award

By TERESA NOWAKOWSKI

Saint Mary's students traveled to the University of Indianapolis to participate in the Indiana Residence Hall Organization Conference with 12 other schools from the state.

Twelve of 13 women went to learn about campus venues offered at other colleges and universities, and hopefully implement them at Saint Mary's in the future. Francis Bruder, a national communicator coordinator for the Residence Hall Association and a Saint Mary's student, sat on a board and judged presentations or bids that reflect each school's accomplishments.

"It gives us a chance to network with other RHAs, to form bonds and connections with other students who could have an idea with what we're going through," Saint Mary's RHA president Shay Jolly said of the conference.

This year, Saint Mary's won first in the spirit bid and third for the banner bid.

Jackie Wright, the new assistant director of the Indiana Residence Hall Organization also received this position through presenting her bid. She will be in charge of taking roll and minutes and relaying information to and from delegates in each college and university in Indiana. Wright hopes to establish an effective system of communication and implement programs from other colleges.

Through these awards, Jolly hopes that the student body will recognize the organization's hard work.

"We've jumped over so many bounds this past year; it's amazing," she said. "We are doing things to better the school.

SMC gears up for winter benefit walk

By TERESA NOWAKOWSKI
News Writer

Students from Saint Mary's and members of the South Bend community will join together for a walk-a-thon Sunday in support of a local day center.

The Winter Walk will raise funds for Saint Margaret's House, which aims to foster a safe environment for women and children. The center helps female victims of addiction, homelessness and domestic abuse to find jobs and create more stable lives for themselves. It also provides education for these women and their children.

"This will be a fun way to support Saint Margaret's House, which I know is a good cause," said Jacqueline Caissiner, spirituality chair of the junior board at Saint Mary's.

The walk covers 1.5 miles and begins at St. James Cathedral at 2:30 p.m. Saint Mary's students will meet at 1:30 p.m. in LeMans circle in order to carpool to the cathedral together, Caissiner said.

After the walk, there will be a reception offering refreshments to celebrate the accomplishment of the walk's completion.

The Winter Walk has been an annual event for many years in the South Bend community, and Saint Mary's has a tradition of participation. This year, Beth Bennett, student director of the theg Center who serves as a liaison between students on campus and community service organizations around South Bend, said she wanted to get the entire section of her hall involved.

"As a campus, Saint Mary's is very involved in Saint Margaret's," Bennett said.

This, she said, can be seen in the fact that several clubs have signed up to participate in this walk, including BOG and the cross country team.

"[The walk] lets people experience what it is like to walk in the shoes of those who don't have transportation, especially in the winter," Bennett said. "Another big point is to get people involved, meet [the women at the center] and see what they are all about."

Jill Vlasek, a resident assistant in Holy Cross Hall, said the walk sounds like a good service opportunity.

"It seems like Friday I could back to the community," she said. "It's a fun way to do service and get some fresh air."

"This is reflective season," he continued. "Let's embrace the season that has to offer.

"I wanted to take an active role to make this JPW 10 times better," Harty said. "I saw the opportunity to have a hands-on effect to make it a wonderful experience."

the more Harty realized she wanted to go farther than simply prepare for her own chance at JPW — she wanted to enhance the weekend for all of her classmates, as well. So she responded to an ad, earned the top position on the JPW committee and got her opportunity to influence tradition from the inside out.

"I wanted to take an active role to make this JPW 10 times better," Harty said. "I saw the opportunity to have a hands-on effect to make it a wonderful experience."

Harty said her efforts began a little late, as this year's JPW committee switched advisors to October, and therefore had a "lot of catching up to do" compared to the committee that typically begin in April.

However, she said she felt confident that the creativity and dedication of her fellow members had added up to a weekend that would please students and parents alike.

The 2004 JPW theme is "And The Nominees Are..." a title that gives a nod to "the Oscars, movies, everything linked," Harty said.

"We wanted to show that everyone is a winner... we should all look at what we have at Notre Dame and say, ‘look!’" she said.

Beginning today, the more than 3,200 parents and juniors who purchased tickets to the weekend's events will have the chance to share the academic, spiritual, social and residential aspects of the University. The weekend kicks off with the "Star-Studded Preemiere" Gala in the Joyce Center at 7 p.m. on Friday, a semi-formal celebration to welcome all guests and emphasize family, Harty said.

Saturday, each of the University's four colleges — the College of Arts and Letters, the College of Science, the Mendoza College of Business and the College of Engineering — will each host workshops to expose parents to their sons' and daughters' academic experiences.

Residence life will also be highlighted on Saturday, when each dorm will host a luau. The official JPW Mass and the "Walk of Fame" president's dinner, both with University President Father Edward Malloy, will be held Saturday night in the Joyce Center. JPW 2004 will conclude with a "Roll the Credits" closing brunch, an activity Harty hopes will draw a fitting close to the weekend while still emphasizing that "it's not the end yet."

"JPW is not necessarily the midpoint, but it is a significant turning point." — Meg Harty

FBI logo appears on CDs

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The FBI said Thursday it is giving Hollywood film studios, music companies and software makers permission to use its name and logo on their DVDs, CDs and other digital media in hopes the labels will deter consumers from making illegal copies.

FBI officials said the idea was conceived jointly by the agency's cyber crime division and representatives of the entertainment and software industries, who claim they've lost billions of dollars due to digital piracy.

"This anti-piracy seal should serve as a warning to those who contemplate the theft of intellectual property, that the FBI will actively investigate cyber crimes and will bring the perpetrators of these criminal acts to justice," said Jana Monroe, assistant director of the FBI's cyber division.

Like the warning messages that have appeared on VHS tapers and DVDs for years, the new labels spell out that unauthorized copying and distribution of digital content is punishable by up to five years in prison and a fine of $250,000. It will be up to the individual entertainment companies and software manufacturers to decide whether to display the new FBI warnings.

Two suspects arrested in murder

DOHA, Qatar — Qatar said Thursday it has arrested two suspects in the assassination of former Chechen President Zelimkhan Yandarbyiev.

Yandarbyiev, 51, was killed Feb. 13 when a bomb ripped through his car. His teenage son was wounded.

The Interior Ministry said the two suspects are being questioned in his death. No further details were available in the ministry statement, carried by the Gulf state’s national news agency, QNA.

President Bush’s acting president, in 1996-1997, had lived in Qatar since 2000. His Russian descent made him suspicious for terrorism and links to al-Qaida. Moscow had been seeking his extradition.

His assassination occurred one week after a bombing in a Moscow subway killed 41 people and wounded more than 100. President Vladimir Putin blamed Chechen rebels and Yandarbyiev for the attack.

RUSSIA boasts of future weapons

MOSCOW — Russia successfully tested a space vehicle that could lead to weapons capable of delivering biological defenses, a senior general said Thursday. He insisted the device was not meant to counter U.S. efforts to develop an anti-missile shield.

Analysts said the device may be part of a campaign to solicit U.S. investment in Russian arms and burnish President Vladimir Putin’s image ahead of March elections he is expected to win. It could also be an effort to restore prestige to the country’s military, which has suffered near collapse since the dissolution of the Soviet Union in 1991.

Col.-Gen. Yuri Baluyevsky, first deputy chief of the General Staff of the Russian armed forces, gave few details about the device tested Wednesday, but said it was a hypersonic vehicle — one that moves at more than five times the speed of sound — that could maneuver in orbit.

Astronomers spy solar system

LOS ANGELES — Astronomers said Thursday they have found a frozen object 4.4 billion miles from Earth that appears to be more than half the size of Pluto and lingers in the Kuiper Belt.

If confirmed, the so-called planetoid would be the largest object found in our solar system since the ninth planet was first spied in 1930. Preliminary observations suggest the frozen celestial body is 10 percent larger than Quaoar, an 800-mile-diameter object found in 2000.

Diocese details abuse claims

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. — A bishop who led the Roman Catholic Diocese of Springfield sexually abused two boys while he was a priest, the diocese said Thursday.

Two altar boys beginning in the 1970s, when he was a parochial school student in Uniondale, the fiscal leader for the Diocese of Springfield, sexually abused two boys while he was a parish priest and asked them to keep quiet in return for the gifts.

The Diocese of Springfield is going on the offensive as the invasion force in Germany — sounds just fine. It’s been a long wait. Soldiers spoke of the frustration of counting the days to an expected departure only to be told they would have to stay on. All said they wanted to hug parents and children, sleep without being woken by explosions, or stroll without a rifle.

Baghdad, then we ended up going backward,” Luna said as his unit piled green duffel bags near a tent at the Army’s Camp Anaconda, near Balad, Iraq.

Now, Luna said, going backward — to home base in Germany — sounds just fine.

"It’s been a long wait. Soldiers spoke of the frustration of counting the days to an expected departure only to be told they would have to stay on. All said they wanted to hug parents and children, sleep without being woken by explosions, or stroll without a rifle.

"I want to get drunk,” blurted out 20-year-old Spc. Yevet Inocencio of Miami, waiting with friends from her unit, the 864th Engineer Battalion, for their flight.

The weeks before departure are ripe with fears, especially about being killed.

Camp Anaconda is regularly pounded by rebel mortar attacks. Since June, dozens of U.S. soldiers on the base have been wounded and a few have been killed by the shrapnel-spraying blasts.

Overall in Iraq, 345 U.S. troops have been killed and 2,700 injured since combat began March 20.
"I feel that we are well served by the program at Saint Mary's," she said. "To have our own program would be somewhat of a duplication. ... [The faculty and staff] are very easy to work with, very cooperative and supportive of our students." In spite of the inconveniences, students spoke highly of the benefits and rewards that they have experienced.

"We really enjoyed the classes," South said. "They are taught by very capable professors." Kheriaty likewise praised the program.

"Student teaching has been a great opportunity," he said. "In a lot of other schools you have to go a fifth year to student teach. I am glad that I will be certified when I graduate."

Both students are also busy student teaching at local high schools to fulfill their final requirement. South is a 10th grade English teacher, while Kheriaty teaches physics and physical science. Following a successful completion of the semester, each will need to take two tests before receiving their Indiana teaching credentials, which Kheriaty said are also applicable in 37 states.

While occasionally the roads have been bumpy, they said, advisers such as Cannon and Turner work hard to make the transition smoother. Turner said he has spent a lot of time talking with the First Year of Studies and the College of Arts & Letters to facilitate the transition.

"I hope that I can help provide information and support to the students and be an advocate for them," she said.

Plans

Other students' plans weren't so concrete. For freshman Jeremy Klein, it's going to be just another weekend.

"We usually make plans at the last minute," Klein said. "We're probably going out to dinner over the weekend. Entertainment options in the dorms will be even more limited than usual, as many residents are keeping a lid on dorm parties." Knott Hall resident advisor Brother Jerome Meyer sent an e-mail to residents Thursday asking them to treat visitors "with the customary kindness, all friendship and courtesy:"

The e-mail also asked residents to refrain from large social gatherings, especially those involving alcohol, over the weekend.

Some students, like senior Lauren Fowler, were down to right pessimistic about the weekend.

"Other than studying and playing in the band concert, I'm a sad loser who's not doing anything else," Fowler said.

However, there are still options. Saturday night, Legends will host The Singles, a Detroit band billed as "Beatle-esque power pop.

Also on Saturday, the Freshman Class Council will sponsor a free Casino Night in the LaFortune Ballroom.

"It's a good opportunity for seniors to get out of town, go to Chicago and see the Bulls," Garcia said. "It's also a chance to see Ryan Humphrey, Notre Dame graduate."

The Orlando Magic drafted Humphrey, a 6-foot-8 forward, in the first round of the 2002 NBA draft, but he was traded later in that season to Memphis.

Tickets for the trip are available in the LaFortune box office for $25.

Bank CEO lectures on corporate fraud

By MATT BRAMNTI

Few executives would envy Steve Watts. He's the head of the former chief executive and current CEO of Sobieski Bank, which became embroiled in a fraudulent-loan scandal when a former loan officer distributed near- ly $10 million in bank-scri.p.ted loans in 2001 and 2002.

Watts gave the first lecture Thursday in the Mendota College of Business Annual Ethics Week. Series of students and faculty heard the Giovannini Commons to hear the executive discuss his work to repair the ethical problems at one of South Bend's oldest companies.

The fraud apparently took place when Andrew Nekvasil, Jr., who has a cr.ible criminal record, including convictions for arson, car theft and a previ.ous instance of bank fraud in the 90s. Nekvasil allegedly used some of the money to buy land and start building houses. However, the con-struction business was just a front, prosecutors said. They w ere friends with, what our own expectations expectations were to work with and worked for, what we also had to verify their work," Watts said.

Not all employees bought into the new ethical stan- dards at Sobieski. Watts said he fired about six employees who didn't support the new ethics practices. "If you find your value sys- tem and ethical standards are different from your employers, you won't be very happy here." Watts said.

While rebuilding confi-dence among his employees, Watts had to cooperate with federal bank regulators, who were sent in to investigate the financial controls at the company. The bank will open a new facility Monday, which Watts said many customers have stayed with the bank, despite negative media attention. "There was a perception that we were out of the loan business entirely," Watts said. "We've had to focus on loans and mortgage business. However, the consumer business might not be enough to save the struggling bank. Sobieski released its earnings Tuesday for the last quarter of 2003, posting a $738,000 profit compared to a $738,000 profit for the same period in 2002.

The news got worse Thursday, when the OTS imposed further regulations on the company and down-graded its condition to undercapitalized.

Watts remained guardedly optimistic about the future of the company. The bank will open a new facility Monday, replacing an older branch.

Watts said many cus-tomers have stayed with the bank, despite negative media attention. Contact Matt Bramanti at mbramanti@md.edu
Cypriot leaders meet in airport

Associated Press

Nicosia — Greek and Turkish Cypriot leaders held a dramatic meeting Thursday at a rusty, abandoned airport that was once Cyprus' gateway to the world, opening talks seen as the best chance in decades to reunify this Mediterranean island divided by war.

Fears that extremists could try to disrupt the talks, held under high security in a U.N. buffer zone, grew with the explosion of a small bomb in front of a senior Turkish Cypriot official's home Thursday. The blast wounded one person.

Greek Cypriot President Tassos Papadopoulos and Turkish Cypriot leader Rauf Denktash indicated they staked out tough positions as they began negotiations.

"It is too early to talk of satisfaction," Papadopoulos said later. "One issue may not be resolved and this may destroy everything."

But the two leaders are under a strict U.N. timetable and face political, constitutional and nationalistic divisions — and Turkish troops in the north that could be considered to be occupying EU land.

"The situation is now better than ever and is a real opportunity that should not be missed," EU Expansion Commissioner Guenter Verheugen said, adding that the EU was ready to spend $330 million to help integrate Cyprus if it is unified.

Denktash and Papadopoulos earlier agreed upon a March 22 deadline to reach an accord. If they fail to do so, Greek and Turkish officials will join the sides. If their involvement fails, a European Union Secretary-General Kofi Annan will fill in the blanks.

The arrangement has raised hopes of a settlement, which would be put to a referendum on each side of the island on April 21.

U.S. State Department spokesman Richard Boucher praised both sides "for the political will they have demonstrated in returning to the talks, and we encourage them to continue their work in a positive vein."

"The historic process is beginning today," was the headline of Kibris, the largest newspaper in the Turkish side.

Greek Cypriot housewife Mari Georgiou, who is "praying for a settlement so that the people of Cyprus can live in peace and harmony in a reunified Cyprus again."

Greek Foreign Minister Tassos Giannitsis said: "I think we are close to a solution no matter how difficult the road is."

The refugees left after Turkey's 1974 invasion, which followed a short-lived coup supported by union of republic with Greece.

"We presented our views to the talks, and we encourage them to continue their work in a positive vein." Greek Cypriot leaders say all 200,000 Greek Cypriot refugees should have the right to return to the north.

The refugees left after Turkey's 1974 invasion, which followed a short-lived coup supported by union with Greece.

Denktash fears that large numbers of returning refugees would change the character of the Turkish north and says the 100,000 called for in a plan outlined by Annan is too much.

"By making Greeks come and live with us you cannot maintain bi-community," Denktash said after the talks. "We insisted that bi-zonality is strengthened."

LONDON — Foreign Secretary Jack Straw said Thursday that five Britons jailed at the U.S. military prison in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, will be returned home in several weeks. But they could be arrested again upon arrival.

Straw told reporters at a news conference that discussion were continuing on the fate of the remaining four British citizens being held.

"One the detainees are back in the U.K., I understand that the police will consider whether to arrest them under the Terrorism Act 2000 for questioning in connection with possible terrorist activity," he said.

Earlier Thursday, Danish Prime Minister Anders Fogh Rasmussen told his parliament that a Dane held at Guantanamo Bay will soon be released.

Danish media have identified him as Slimane Hadj Aldehrahmeh. He was transferred to the U.S. Naval base in Cuba in February 2001 after being captured in Afghanistan.

"Under Danish law it is not possible to put him on trial. He will come to Denmark as a free man," Foreign Minister Per Stig Moeller said during a debate in parliament.

Five prisoners will return from Cuba

State Department spokesman Robert B. B. Rearden said the detainee would be released soon. He did not provide a more specific time frame.

He said Secretary of State Colin Powell had spoken with the Danish Foreign Minister Per Stig Moeller about the situation.

At the White House, spokesman Scott McClellan said the United States has received assurances from Denmark and Britain that the detainees being released will not pose "any future threat to America or our friends and allies.

Five other Guantanamo prisoners — a Spaniard and four Saudi Arabians — were recently released and returned to their countries for detention or prosecution.

"These detainees who are at Guantanamo Bay are people who are a threat to our country. That's why we detained there, they are a danger to America and our friends and allies," McClellan told reporters.

The United States has provided assurances from those countries that we are returning those detainees to that they will make sure that they do not pose any future threat to America or our friends and allies," he said.

First lady defends education plan

Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — Laura Bush on Thursday defended “No Child Left Behind,” the centerpiece of her husband’s education policy, from critics who say it’s underfunded and overemphasizes the importance of testing.

“The testing that a lot of people object to is not punitive,” the first lady said while visiting a magnet school that mixes academic studies with technology coursework to prepare students for jobs in the 21st century. “You are giving a test so you’ll know what you need to do. You can’t solve the problem unless you can diagnose it.”

Leading Democratic presidential candidates have criticized the education plan for the problem unless you can diagnose it.”

“I know that there are some states that are not money to succeed. You are giving a test so you’ll know what you need to do. You can’t solve the problem unless you can diagnose it.”

Mrs. Bush said the Democrats’ claims that Bush did not report for National Guard duty in Alabama are an attempt to “divert attention” from her husband’s successes.

“We’ve just been through a Democratic primary where the candidates themselves have spent more than $100 million running against the president,” she said.

Mrs. Bush, a former librarian, said she thought the Patriot Act should be renewed, despite opposition from civil rights groups that argue it violates privacy rights and constitutional free speech.

“I think it’s very important in the fight against terror­ism,” she said, adding that she understands the concerns of librarians who have rallied against the act as an infringement on First Amendment rights. “I also know that no part of that act has been acted upon in a library.”

Las Vegas was the last stop on a three-day trip by Mrs. Bush to promote education and fund-raising events in Arkansas, California and Nevada. President Bush won Nevada in 2000 with 49.9 percent of the vote. The Las Vegas area was the only part of the state that he lost to Al Gore.

The first lady went to Advanced Technologies Academy, a school in the Clark County School District where students have regular coursework, including advanced placement classes.

The school also offers programs in graphic design, computer science, business, information technology and other fast-growing fields.

Remains found buried at fake doctor’s house

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Police believe the same day a Manhattan financial analyst vanished last year, a phony physician treated her for a growth on her tongue — with deadly results.

Authorities were awaiting the outcome of an autopsy Thursday to confirm that a decomposed body discovered entombed in cement at the medical imp­lantor’s New­r, N.J., mansion was that of the ana­lyst, Marta Cruz. The fake doctor, Dean Faiello, remains a fugitive.

Detectives were “working on the hypothesis that she may have received treatment for a condition called black tongue. From which she may not have survived,” said police spokesman Paul Browne. He offered no information on the type of treatment.

The decomposing body, found Wednesday inside a suitcase buried in a floor slab in the Newark house, matched a description of the 35­year-old Cruz, including the fact she had breast implants, police said.

Faiello, 44, was arrested in 2002 for producing without a license and illegally possessing medical drugs. He fled New­o­in­g at a department store near Faiello’s apartment, where she may have died.

The woman’s family reported her missing April 18 after she failed to pick up children at the airport.

Around the time of the disappear­ance, Faiello had several bags of cement delivered to his Newark mansion, authorities said. The cement was used to build a raised platform in the basement, where he said he built the house in May and fled the country in September, they said.

NASA to prepare rescue shuttle

Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — NASA said Thursday that the first post-Columbia launch might be as early as next fall, but Administrator Sean O’Keefe said it would not be no earlier than January 2005. Because of a new safety requirement that makes the shuttle to the station.

The rescue shuttle will not necessarily be on the launch pad, but will be ready to fly to the space station within 45 to 90 days. Shuttle program manager Bill Parsons said that is "one of the most demanding or­der of days it can send a mission to the space station. That way, the astronauts can inspect and repair their ships and then return to Earth with the station. Parsons said that if looks like it’s forcing anybody to do anything in a way that pressures that sched­ule is all, we’ll defer it to March if need be,” he said during a visit to Orlando, Fla.

The space agency has yet to decide which shuttle — Atlantis or Discovery — will make the first post-Columbia flight and which one will be the standby. The fleet has been grounded since Columbia shattered over Texas on Feb. 1, 2003.

This will be the first time the space agency has had a rescue ship waiting in the wings since the days of the Apollo program's landing on the moon.

"I don’t believe that there’s an awful lot of extra training or extra things that we have to do for a rescue mission,” Parsons said. “It would just be going to the inter­nation­al space station, picking up crew, making sure that we had the appropriate things, that we need­ed to bring that crew on board and then return safely.”

In the case of Columbia, such a rescue would have been impossi­ble. The shuttle was too far from the space station; it was in an entirely different orbit than the station and lacked the fuel to get there.

Any shuttle sent to Columbia’s aid would have had to be in forma­tion, and spacewalkers would have been needed to transfer Columbia’s seven astronauts to the rescue ship.

The shuttle lifts off on the first flight since Columbia will incorporate numerous changes, including improvements to the external fuel tank and the leading edges of the wings. The changes were prompted by the Columbia accident, in which a piece of foam broke off from the external fuel tank during launch and damaged the wing, damaging the spacecraft during re-entry.

One woman was the only part of the state that he lost to Al Gore. The first lady went to Advanced Technologies Academy, a school in the Clark County School District where students have regular coursework, including advanced placement classes.

returns to South Bend to play the most authentic Brazilian music in the US. A 7-piece group of Brazilians and their music, their repertoire consists of a variety of styles and rhythms of Brazil, such as Samba, Choro, Bossa Nova and, of course, Batucada, the exciting, all-­percussion jam session that will bring you to your feet dancing—just like at Carnaval in Rio!
Welcome Parents

Junior parents, welcome to campus. For many of you, other than the start and end of your child's career at Notre Dame and the occasional football weekend, this is the only time that you will spend time on campus that you pay over $30,000 a year for your child.

But lest you think this is just a normal weekend at Notre Dame, we want to clue you in to some of the preparations for your arrival.

The seniors have been shipped off to Chicago and the underclassmen have gone to Winona State to avoid the wrath of ravers who have moved parties two hours earlier. The University has dispatched front loaders to move piles of snow. The janitors have been hard at work to make sure that even the bathroo do not smell. And your sons and daughters have been hard at work, too. They have done their laundry for the first time this year.

The custody of alcohol — the forbidden hard variety — is not governed by policies of the administration of either Notre Dame and the occasional football weekend, this is the only time that you will spend time on campus that you pay over $30,000 a year for your child.

The other minority

Every day the Viewpoint articles seem to be about how someone on campus is offended or underrepresented. Here is a little about the most underrepresented group on campus—an "alternate lifestyle" group that ought to be offended. Although a larger group than any racial minority, no popular presidential candidate ever adopts a plank in their favor, nor Notre Dame media writes about them and no one seems to acknowledge their existence.

They are a minority of a different kind—a minority by choice, no doubt. In fact, they are an interesting bunch because they have the ability to disappear on weekends, or so it seems to those who are a part of the "popular" social scene. You guessed it—I am talking about the alcohol-free student.

The first question you must be thinking is, "Why?" Undoubtedly there are many reasons a person may choose not to drink. I could fill the rest of this column with reasons why I do not. Instead, I will summarize some of them in one paragraph.

Have you ever eaten at a homeless shelter? Talk to the people there. See what they tell you. Have you ever read the Bible or even read about the philosophy of Socrates? Examine what they say about drunkenness—stating that it is frowned upon is a gross understatement. Have you ever considered what drinking says about yourself? I will tell you—it says that you are not good enough as you are, so take this substance to change you—to make you do things that, if you were thinking straight, you would never be doing. And where does the fun part come in between the getting fat, picking, poor decision making and increased chance of physical or sexual assault? I tend to think I can have a much better time while sober. And, personally, I realize that once I decide to do something, I do it all-out and never halfway, so I would be especially at risk if I started. Perhaps others use rationale similar to mine.

Now, if you were not convinced before you read that, I will let you know that you still are not. My goal is not to change you—it is to demonstrate from where nondrinkers may be coming. With that in mind, consider this incident from my viewpoint.

This school encourages drinking, while doing little to offer opportunities for those who wish to abstain from it. A university supposedly adamantine in its Christian fervor, I think this is a bold statement, yet true.

Even regarding the transportation of alcohol, du Lac says, "Students must ensure that the containers are closed and in suitable packaging such that the contents of the package are not readily identifiable as alcoholic beverages." In other words, "Go ahead and bring beer in, but please do not hurt the school's precious image by showing that side to any chance visitor." In addition, do not forget Freshman O, which in men's halls, anyway, mainly consists of upperclassmen telling the new students how to avoid getting in trouble when they drink. Lastly, even the gym and Huddle close earlier on weekends—heck, what are kids doing here? Go out and drink off your week.

Want further proof? Eighty-five percent of students here are regular drinkers as compared to only 8 percent of students nationally. In addition, 27 percent of last year's freshmen were nondrinkers as compared to only 12 percent of the entire student body. Students are subtly pressured and, by and large, they give in over time.

The students themselves are more ridiculous than the administration. I am convinced that the average student spends 50 hours a week studying and none thinking. Students cheered when smoking was banned from buildings, and many now support banning it at entrance ways, and perhaps entirely from campus. Nevertheless, when it comes to alcohol—which is at least as large an annoyance to the innocent—drunken students do not hesitate to fill dorm hallways, puke in the sinks or invade rooms. You call yourselves my Notre Dame family, but I can tell you this—no one in my family has ever acted like that.

So what is my point? To students who drink, stop acting like non-drinkers have some sort of social defect. To students who have chosen not to drink, be proud and unafraid to let people know that yours is the high ground, and it shows character and integrity.

As for the administration, I have a special request. Please consider bringing Notre Dame's dorm system up to date with the rest of the country. Of course, I do not mean with respect to parties, but rather by giving housing options to those who do not want to drink. Nearly every major school in the nation offers students the option of signing up for a designated substance-free hall or floor—or at least asks questions about it when assigning freshmen roommates. This place currently does nothing and ignores the problem. The two new residence halls proposed in the master plan offer the perfect opportunity, and randomly selected dry hallways would be sufficient until then.

Although I expect to hear quite a bit of negative response about this article, both in the newspaper and personally, I realize that my requests do not in any way prevent current drinkers from continuing; so calm down. As for fellow nondrinkers, I would love to receive letters of support and to hear your thoughts because, contrary to popular belief, we do not hang out with each other in the library every Saturday night.

 LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Request for apology is reverse discrimination

While scanning The Observer for grammatical errors to mock with my friends as usual, I came across yesterday's story about The Observer's editors defusing the paper at the Student Senate.

Shockingly, The Observer did, in fact, have editors, I read the article with bemusement, and I was rewarded with the latest nugget of absurdity from the Politically Correct Police.

In a frighteningly Orwellian twist of language, the Diversity Council, enraged by the multiple perspectives being expressed in the recent Viewpoint debate on affirmative action, asked the offending editors for an apology. Apparently, tolerance for the views of multiple viewpoints being expressed in the recent Viewpoint debate on affirmative action, asked the offending editors for an apology. Laughs at Legends
Humor Artists present their first all stand-up show of the semester

By MARIA SMITH
Scene Editor

Putting yourself on stage in front of a crowd is never easy. Putting yourself up there with no lines, no props and no idea what situation you’re going to have to deal with is even harder. Yet this is what the Humor Artists love to do, and it is a challenge they take on every time they put on a show.

“It’s a blast for the performers because we constantly get fresh material, and the comedy is live,” club co-president Bob Masters said. “We’re out there without a net.”

In Thursday night’s all stand-up show at Legends, the group tried out its talents in a series of unscripted games that forced performers to think on their feet and quickly come up with lines. Some of the group’s favorite games include World’s Worst, in which the performers impersonate the world’s worst gynecologist; Elvis impersonator or other categories; Sound Like a Song, in which the performers have to improvise songs based on their lines and Two Lines, in which characters have to act out a scene using only the two lines that have been chosen for them. The show resembled a local version of ABC’s “Whose Line is it Anyway?” with a Notre Dame twist.

Thursday night’s performance was the first test of the type of show the Humor Artists hope to establish more regularly this year. By setting up weekly or bi-weekly performances, the group hopes to pull in a more regular audience.

The Humor Artists is a mixed bag of talents and personality, with about 20 members who participate more or less depending on time and inclination. Group members Peter Wicks and Mike Bradt have done semi-professional stand-up comedy, while others simply enjoy the challenge of being asked to play an obsessive-compulsive auto mechanic or a drunken Kermit the frog on a moment’s notice.

Besides the 12 members of the improvisational group and the five members of the Stand-Up Club, the group has a few other members who participate in the larger shows. Last semester’s Night at the Improvers featured the whole group in improvisational as well as scripted skits.

Some of the group’s alumni go on in comedy, trying to establish themselves in groups like Second City in Chicago and the Groundlings in L.A. For others it’s just a hobby.

The group is open to all students but tends to be self-selecting.

“We don’t cut people, because it’s really sink or swim,” club co-president Kevin Gregg said. “After the first show, when you’re up there in front of an audience, people usually leave on their own if it’s not their thing.”

That is exactly what the group does every Wednesday and Sunday when they get together to run practice skits, play improvisational games and build group rapport.

“At first you tend to be reserved; you don’t want to jump up. The biggest thing is just to practice and be willing to throw yourself out there.”

For some kids it is; for some kids don’t, but you can work on it.”

The Singles
One of Detroit’s garage rock bands comes to Legends on Saturday night

By PATRICK VASSEL
Scene Writer

Just a few years ago, MTV and a variety of rock critics hailed the return of “garage rock” bands. With little studio assistance and relying mainly on scratchy voices and crunching guitars, bands such as The White Stripes, The Strokes and The Hives found their niche and fame. The Detroit-based genre was quickly upon a popular phenomenon allowing hundreds of bands to come out of the garages and onto radio stations.

The Singles is a band from the suburbs of Detroit that has managed to rise above the hype and emerge as a group with a distinct sound and catchy songs. Formed in 2001 behind lead vocalist and guitarist Vince Frederick, the band is comprised of Will Yates on bass and Dave Kneppe on drums.

Frederick, who doubles as the lead singer and songwriter, describes the band’s sound as “Just straightforward rock ‘n’ roll, obviously with the influence of the old school bands but with the energy of today.” Frederick became lost in the music of the 1950s and ‘60s in high school after being introduced to his parents’ Beatles and Chuck Berry records at an early age. The influence is obvious listening to any track off their debut album, “Better Than Before.”

Songs such as the single “He Can Go, You Can’t Stay” open with catchy riffs and a driving sound reminiscent of the early days of rock, but The Singles blend their energy perfectly with this sound to create a sound that is both pop and powerful. This sound is so different from any other band out there that it is difficult to draw comparisons. Though often grouped with bands like The White Stripes, The Singles are almost in a genre by themselves.

The band will collaborate with producer Tony Huffer, whose credits include a Beck album, and most recently the new Supergrass disc.

The Singles are a young band with a new sound and explosive energy, and they aren’t wasting any time. Frederick said one of the band’s most important goals is to make sure their sound doesn’t ever become stale. Their album “Better than Before” has received solid reviews and still sounds great after a few listens, but The Singles want to keep moving and keep progressing as a band.

“Right now, success is being able to keep making records, and just to have people listen to it,” Frederick said. “You know, there’s a lot of acts out there, but everyone wouldn’t be able to do it if people didn’t listen. When we’re all done, we want to be able to look back and see a natural progression of our music. We don’t want to just keep putting the same record out there.”

And The Singles are already progressing toward success beyond Detroit — and beyond the garage. The Singles perform Saturday at Legends at 8:45 p.m.

Plenty of people talk about starting college bands. But when twins Pete and David Miller met Lawrence Santiago during a spring visitation before their freshman year and said they should start a band if they all ended up at Notre Dame, they meant it.

The next fall the trio found themselves in school together, and true to their word began playing with Pete Miller on drums, David Miller on guitar and Santiago as lead singer.

Keyboard player Mike Maimone joined the band after meeting Santiago in Zahm Hall.

At first, the musicians played under the name The Island Boys and were later known as Housebound. During their sophomore year, Santiago came up with the name Station One, and they stuck with it. The group has also switched bassists a few times, recruiting sophomore Bobby Seus to play with the group at the beginning of this year.

The group may have gone through a few changes, but four years' name Station One, Santiago, not limited to band vocals, also played Bernardo in the Pasquerilla East Musical Company's production of West Side Story last weekend.

"We have a very diverse style. We're sometimes described as a hybrid between Sublime and Maroon 5."

Pete Miller
Drummer

Station One has performed at competitions, parties and bars, including Notre Dame's former Senior Bar (now renamed Legends).

"It was very different playing in a band than in piano recitals, and it was a difficult transition," Maimone said. "But it's a lot of fun and a lot more rewarding."

Pete Miller said the band has a "very diverse style" and has been described as a "hybrid between Sublime and Maroon 5."

The band covers a lot of current hits but also enjoys writing its own music. Sometimes they work alone, but most of the compositions are a collaborative effort.

"Lawrence has us covering 'Senorita' by Justin Timberlake, but we also play a lot of Nirvana type stuff," Maimone said. "At first we weren't sure about covering Timberlake, but it's fun."

Over the past four years the band has played at many bars, parties and competitions in the area. During their freshman year, the group won third place in NAZZ, the SUB-sponsored battle of the bands, and the following year they won first place.

The band tapered off during their junior year when the lead singer and keyboard players both went abroad, though the Miller twins and a new set of musicians still took third place in the competition.

While the group enjoys performing on campus, they have found the Notre Dame music scene to be somewhat constraining.

"There are a few really good bands. It's just people don't know about them, and there's not enough places to play," Maimone said. "We've been trying to play at Legends this semester, but there aren't enough slots for all the bands, so we're starting to look at bars.

"The music scene could be good. There are a lot of talented musicians here, but it also doesn't seem like people are incredibly interested in campus bands."

With the group members probably parting ways after graduation, tonight's show at Reckers could be the beginning of the end for the band.

"Obviously we don't want to give it up, but everybody wants to be a rock star," Maimone said. "We're going to do the best we can to get a demo recorded and send it to labels."

"We all have pretty set plans, but we'd all prefer to do a tour or something this summer if we could."

Station One is currently working on their website, www.stationonehation.com, where the group will soon have posted biographies of the band members and pictures of the band.

Tonight's show will also feature Layden, a local band including the Miller's younger brother James. The younger Miller plans to attend Notre Dame next year and hopes to continue to play with his band after starting school.

The chance to hear one of Notre Dame's few but proud campus bands will be free and open to all students.

Irish hope to end season with win against Denison

By MATT MOONEY

The Observer • page 14

Season finales are rarely more anticlimactic than this one.
The Notre Dame men's and women's fencing team will cruise into West Lafayette on Saturday as the only ranked team from the Big East in Central Meet. The Irish will face teams all hailing from the Midwestern states - Michigan, Michigan State, University of Chicago, Wisconsin, Detroit, Mercy and host Purdue.

Notre Dame will have a relatively easy fencing weekend for the first time all year. After weathering all but one of the tempests brought on by numerous top 10 opponents (six for the women, seven for the men), the absence of a top school gives coach Janusz Bednarski plenty of room to breathe.

"We are expecting a bit weaker teams," he said. "We went through the giants already so I don't expect that we'll lose." Matches that the Irish expect to win allows for many of the backups to get much needed experience for them to earn a monogram. While the starters may begin the matches, the subs will likely enter as soon as the clinching 14th victory has been secured.

"This is not the first time," Bednarski feels that is the chance for the walk-ons to get some experience in the tournament. "They are as much a part of the team as anyone else," he said. "They can definitely take care of their own business this weekend and do really well." The West vs. Central meet equates to the calm before the storm of the impending post-season. However, Bednarski feels any competition whether strong or weak serves as valuable experience.

"Expect tough lighting and confirmation that the team is strong enough to be one of the top teams in the Midwest," he said.

The freshmen can already feel the sense of urgency to begin the defense of the team's national title. "I'm nervous that I might not qualify for the NCAA's because I know that we need to qualify to 12 wins and, I don't like that pressure," freshman esperit Amy Orlando said.

"Revenge is a sweet taste left in their mouths." "I'm disappointed still about dropping that one match to ruin our streak, but everybody worked hard and started working harder," he said.

"We all feel prepared, pressure or no pressure.

"I've been in training and going to individual lessons, but I'm ready," she said. "Purdue is also just a good warm up for Penn State." Saturday will close another successful regular season as the Irish fencing teams combined for only one dual loss all season. The top-ranked women's team will look to clinch their first undefeated regular season since the 1994-95 season. Adding to the book's records, the women also try to stretch their streak of consecutive dual match victories.

Their current mark stands at 34 matches which is good for the best in all time in school history. Despite suffering only one loss all season, Snyder says the men's team still has a bit of a sour taste left in their mouths. "It's disappointing all about dropping that one match to ruin our streak, but everybody worked hard and started working harder," he said.

"I think it'll be good for us to get their sights set upon postsea­son action. Usually, the Irish are fully aware of the importance of every game. With each game, the team will not only focus upon their oppo­nent's strengths and weaknesses, but also the basic fundamentals of the game.

Although Sunday's match is against Denison marks the final meet of the season, the end result could have a significant impact on the first games of the season. However, the team feels confident that experience can offset any adversity.

"I just want to go out and play hard and do the basics like get ground balls," Walsh said. "I think that'll make us come out on top at the end."

Irish travel to Palm Springs

By JUSTIN SCHUVER
Assistant Sports Editor

Fresh off a 4-1 start to their season, Notre Dame stays on the road to visit the warm climates of Palm Springs, Calif., for the Palm Springs Classic this weekend.

The Irish kick off tournament play against No. 12 Tennessee Sunday morning. Notre Dame's 4-1 start, which includes a win over then-No. 8 Nebraska, is the best start for the Irish since 2001 when the team won its first eight games.

The Irish played well in last weekend's UNLV Classic, defeating every team they played at the tournament except for No. 2 California. Notre Dame played the Bruins tough, outhitting their opponents 7-4, but still losing 2-1.

The Irish have scored 16 home runs, including a game-winning shot against Nebraska.

The Irish's pitching, a strength last season, has continued to be impressive this year. Despite allowing 15 runs combined in the tournament, only seven of those were earned runs.

Junior Carrie When picked up two wins in relief, and sophomore Heather Booth and junior Steffany Stenglein each collected wins. The team's ERA for the tournament was 1.44 and Irish pitchers struck out 29 batters in 34 innings.

This weekend's tournament will be a bit of a homecoming for the Irish, with five of their 15 players being from California. In addition, Notre Dame has four position players (Hartmann, Carissa Jagusch, Mallorie Lenz and Meghann Ruthrauff) who hail from the Golden State.

Stanford remains unbeaten with win

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Stanford survived another threat to its perfect season.

Junior Josh Childress scored a career-high 36 points and the top-ranked Cardinal rallied from a 13-point first-half deficit to beat Southern California 76-67 Thursday night for its school-record 22nd consecutive victory. Stanford (13-0) clinched a share of its fourth Pac-10 title in six years with three weeks remaining in the regular season.

But perfection has been harder to maintain recently. The Cardinal came from 19 points down and won at Oregon on Jan. 31, then Nick Robinson hit a buzzer-beating 3-pointer to hold off Arizona on Feb. 7.

USC (10-13, 5-9) threatened once when the Trojans led by six at the break in Palo Alto. Just like in that game, the Cardinal dominated the start of the second half. Stanford outscored USC 27-8 to take a 55-44 lead with 10:48 remaining. Childress hit a 3-pointer and scored another basket, giving the Trojans, who had solid offense from the free throw line earlier in the game, just 2-0-5 in the final 11:55 when they trailed by three.

Irish finish preseason play

By MATT MOONEY
Sports Writer

One way to gauge a team heading into a new season is by comparing them to the best. Notre Dame women's lacrosse team will do just that as they continue their preseason play by traveling to New Jersey this weekend. There, the team will participate in the Princeton Invitational where the No. 17 Irish will meet the preseason No. 1 and two-time defending national champion Princeton Tigers.

The match against Princeton follows Notre Dame's 17-9 exhibition victory over Team Canada last weekend. Notre Dame dominated the team's first preseason match of the spring, jumping out to a 12-4 halftime lead and never looking back.

Princeton, however, will be a much different team than Team Canada. Against the Tigers, the Irish will face one of the lacrosse giants of the northeast. However, junior attack Jackie Bowers feels that experience against the nation's premier lacrosse school will serve as a measuring stick for her team.

"We have nothing to lose," Bowers said. "They're the champions the past two years and that's the level we want to be at. If we don't do as well, that will show what we have to work on to reach that level." Petcoff said. "We're the competitors the past two years and that's the level we want to be at. If we don't do as well, that will show what we have to work on to reach that level." Bowers said.

The lacrosse team can expect a similar caliber opponent once the regular season begins. Notre Dame's schedule is chock full of teams ranked teams, with nine teams appearing in the preseason top 25. Four of those nine are in the top 10, including Big East rival No. 6 Georgetown.

"A lot of people don't know how good we are with most of the top teams being out on the East Coast," Bowers said. "Our expectations are to prove to all the top 10 teams that we are a force to reckon with."

Bowers feels that some teammates have a lot to prove individually.

"We have a lot of older players who haven't been given the opportunity to really contribute and they've waited a long time for that," she said. A couple seniors have been in the program for three years and their turn is finally up to show everyone what they have.

Some of the newcomers also have to step into roles.

"We do have a couple freshmen we'll look to have contribute, mostly (midfielder) Megan Murphy, she's been playing very well," Bowers said.

Notre Dame will kick off their regular season a week later on Feb. 27 when they battle California.
MEN’S TENNIS

Irish travel to Chicago to face No. 37 Northwestern

By KATE GALES
Spors Writer

The No. 50 men’s tennis team joins the JPW-induced exodus from campus this weekend, traveling to Chicago for a match at No. 37 Northwestern before returning to host No. 40 Southern Methodist University.

“All we’ve done is to hold serve,” head coach Bobby Bayliss said, reflecting on his team’s performance through the dual-match season. “We haven’t done anything exceptional, but we haven’t stumbled, either.”

This weekend and the coming weeks will be telling for the Irish and their postseason destiny. “It will certainly be a challenge,” Bayliss said, but he remained optimistic despite the screwy situation,” he said.

Junior Chuck Perrin has been a key factor for Northwestern this week against ranked opponents. The 8-3 Wildcats are 5-1 at the beginning of the year, but Bayliss said, “Sometimes you play your best tennis when you’re in a screwy situation,” he said.

The No. 50 men’s tennis team is a better team level.”

All we’ve done is to hold SMU here at noon the next day. “Some times you play your best tennis when you’re in a screwy situation,” he said.

The 8-3 Wildcats are 5-1 at home, with four of those wins against ranked opponents. Junior Chuck Perrin has been a key factor for Northwestern this year as they claw their way up the rankings.

“We’ve done a lot of competing for the ability to play in that third doubles slot.”

Bayliss is leaving the option of breaking up the top two teams open to debate.

“Our switched teams [at No. 1 and 2 against Wisconsin] stayed in the nucleus of four people,” he said. “If we have to break up one of the teams and split them in order to strengthen us at the bottom, it may be something we’ll consider.”

The Irish face Northwestern at the Combe Tennis Center in Evanston, Ill., 4 p.m. Saturday and Southern Methodist at 12 p.m. at the Eick Tennis Pavilion.

Belles look to end season positively

By STEVE COYER
Sports Writer

After a long regular season, the Belles hope to end on a high note.

Saint Mary’s (7-17) has fallen short of its high expectations set at the beginning of the year, but the team has the chance to accomplish one of its goals on Saturday against Olivet College.

Olive (9-15) currently shares last place in the Michigan Intercollegiate Athletic Association (MIAA) with the Belles, as both teams have a 2-11 conference record. With a victory, the Belles would avoid a last place finish and gain momentum going into the league tournament.

On Wednesday, the Belles prevailed 64-59 over Kalamazoo (13-11) to record their first victory of the season against a team after dropping a close match last weekend to No. 20 Texas. Led by senior Ginwai Chingoka, 2003 All-WAC selection, the Mustangs will be a challenge for the Irish. The season match of Sunday comes only hours after the team returns from Chicago.

“SMU hasn’t played an extensive of a schedule yet,” Bayliss said. “Both teams beat us 4-3 last year, both matches were close, and we’d like to reverse those scores this year.”

A key point of the match will be doubles, an area that has plagued the Irish through the dual-match season. Freshman Ryan Keckley and senior Luis Haddock have comprised the No. 1 doubles team ranked No. 18 nationally, and senior Matthew Scott and junior Brent D’Amico have played consistently with a winning record.

After a string of disappointing losses, the critical win against Kalamazoo has given the Belles renewed confidence as they look towards the playoffs. In their first league win of the season, the Belles decisively defeated Olivet 77-69 in a game where the bench accounted for 33 of Saint Mary’s points.

Since then, the Belles have relied less on their bench and more on forward Emily Creachbaum, who scored 18 points in Wednesday’s victory and 26 points in a loss last Saturday to Alma.

Creachbaum, who received a nomination for MIAA player of the week, only managed 10 points in a previous matchup against Olivet due to foul trouble and the defense of center Amanda Johnston.

Johnston scored 32 points and grabbed 12 rebounds last time against the Belles and looks to be the biggest weapon for Olivet, both on offense and defense.

While the Belles will carry momentum into Saturday’s game, Olivet likewise will come in confident after a 102-72 victory over Tri-State.

In the shootout against Tri-State, Olivet had five players score in double figures and the team shot 12-25 from 3-point range.

Every year from the 1999 to 2001 seasons, either Saint Mary’s or Olivet has held last place in the MIAA.

The two teams have alternated years of last place finishes. Last year Saint Mary’s was in last, so if the pattern holds Olivet will take last this year.

The Belles play their final of the regular season Saturday at 3 p.m. at Olivet.

Irish anxious to start season today in the USC Classic

By CHRIS FEDERICO

The Notre Dame Athletic Department could save some money by canceling the baseball team’s flight to Los Angeles this weekend.

After all, Irish head coach Paul Mainieri says his team is so ready for its season opening matchup with San Diego State today in the USC Public Storage Classic that it could fly to the West Coast without the aid of a jet.

“We’re chomping at the bit. We’re so excited, I don’t even know if we’ll need an airplane to fly into Los Angeles,” Mainieri said.

After being cooped up indoors all winter, the Irish — who are ranked as high as No. 10 by Collegiate Baseball Magazine — are finally ready to hit the field and kick off the 2004 season starting with three games this weekend against San Diego State, Southern California and Louisville.

“After preparing all fall, then the weather turns bad and you’re locked indoors, you’re seeing everyone around the country start to play games before you, you just get real anxious,” Mainieri said. “It’s just a natural excitement, but also with the fact that we’ve been indoors for so long. We’re just anxious to get out there and get after it once we’ve got.”

Notre Dame’s first test of the season comes today against San Diego State, a team coached by Major League Baseball great and former National League Ad-Star Tony Gwynn.

“If they have [Gwynn’s] skill, then I’ll be worried,” said Mainieri of the Aztecs skipper, who won eight National League batting titles in his 20 seasons and retired with a .338 career batting average. “But I told [Irish pitcher] Chris Nisell that as long as Tony Gwynn is coaching them and not hitting third in their lineup, I feel much more confident about beating those guys.”

The Aztecs (6-8) hold an important advantage over the Irish because they have already played 15 games this year (including an exhibition opener against a San Diego State alumni squad).

“They have a big advantage because they’ve been outdoors and their players have been playing,” Mainieri said. “Certainly their players are further advanced into the season, but that’s just the way it is, and we’ve been dealing with this every year. I think that having a day of practice outdoors when we [got] to Los Angeles Thursday before our first game will help us immensely, and I think we will make up for it in a real hurry.”

Nisell, who was 9-1 last season with a 2.65 ERA, will likely start the Irish against senior right-hander Scott Shoemaker, who is 1-2 this year with a 6.23 ERA.

Saturday, the Irish will face the host team USC (1-3), who has gotten off to an unusually slow start this year.

Notre Dame sophomore left-hander Tom Thornton, who won 5-1 last season with a 1.81 ERA, will likely face off against sophomore lefty Bobby Pascial who owns the Trojans’ only win this season and allowed one earned run in six innings pitched in his only start this season.

Sunday, a pair of freshmen will square off on the mound, as Notre Dame’s Derik Olvey will face Louisville right-hander Justin Valdes.

Olvey will likely be one of many Irish freshmen to see action in the three games over the weekend. Center fielder Danny Dressman will probably be in the starting lineup against the right-hander Shoemaker today, and Mainieri said that fellow freshmen, first baseman Mike Drury and catcher Sean Gaston, could see time in the field along with pitchers Dan Kapala, Jess Stewart and Jeff Samardzija, who saw playing time on the football field in the fall as a wide receiver for the Irish.

“I’ve always had a lot of guys when it comes to playing freshmen,” Mainieri said. “Sometimes they make mistakes, and sometimes they can be a little inconsistent. My feeling is that if they deserve to play, and they are going to be the best guys to help the team, they are going to be the better ones out there.”

The Irish begin their 2004 season at 5 p.m. today against the Aztecs.

Announcing the Year 2004 Annual Awards of the Albert Ravarino Italian Studies Travel Scholarship

Thanks to a generous gift from the Albert Ravarino family, the Italian Studies Program is pleased to announce the year 2004 annual competition for travel in support of summer research and foreign study in Italy. Grants will be made in amounts not to exceed $3,000, and will not normally cover all expenses. Notre Dame graduate and undergraduate students who are planning to pursue research or a formal program of summer study in Italy are invited to apply. Students must have completed at least one year of Italian language. The course work will normally be in Italian; will involve the study of Italian language, literature, and culture; and must be applicable to a student’s degree program at the University of Notre Dame.

Recommended programs for foreign study include, but are not limited to: Loyola University in Rome, Boston University in Padua, UCLA in Pisa, Miami University in Urbino, Columbia University in Scandiano. Interested students are encouraged to consult the materials on Italian foreign study in the Department of Romance Languages, 343 O’Shaughnessy Hall.

Students are invited to submit a letter which should include:
1) an explanation of how the proposed research or foreign study will enhance their degree program at Notre Dame
2) a personal statement indicating their background, interests, and long-term goals
3) a description of the research project or the program they intend to follow
4) a budget indicating the costs involved
5) the names of two references.

Application Deadline: Thursday, March 4th, 2004

Doubles key for Irish today against BYU

By ANN LOUGHERY
Sports Writer

Inconsistent doubles matches may be No. 20 Brigham Young University's Achilles heel as they face Notre Dame today at 4 p.m.

"They had some impressive wins against William and Mary and Southern California, but they've been up and down in doubles," coach Jay Louderback said.

The Cougars (7-2) bested Kansas 7-0 and are fresh off a 5-2 win over Denver last weekend. No. 26 Notre Dame (5-1) collected a trio of wins last weekend against Virginia Commonwealth and Southern California, but may be No. 20 Brigham Young, and may be No. 20 BYU last weekend.

"Those three matches on the road really boosted the kids' confidence," Louderback said. "We've been concentrating on doubles in practice, so it was good for the kids to see their hard work pay off."

The primary difficulty the Irish must cope with this weekend will be the speed at which the Cougars serve and return the ball. Louderback said that preparing the team to overcome this obstacle has been of utmost importance this week.

"We've been getting the kids ready for balls to come at them hard," Louderback said. "We see this meet as a good opportunity to play someone ranked ahead of us."

At BYU last year, the Cougars fell to the Irish in a close 4-3 decision. Notre Dame posted four wins in singles, but failed to capture the doubles point.

"We'll go in wanting to win, but every match is going to be tough," Louderback said. "But the more matches we play, the more we'll play."

Among the favorites excepted to contend for an individual title is sophomore distance runner Molly Huddle. Her 3,000-meter time of 9:08.60 is second in the conference to Providence's Kim Smith.

Huddle is also a member of the women's distance medley relay team along with Lauren King, Kristen Dodd and Kerry Meagher. Huddle and King were members of last year's team that won the conference title. They are poised to repeat this year if they can knock off Georgetown. The Hoyas defeated the Irish at the Meyo Invitational two weeks ago by 0.67 seconds. King, a junior, is the defending conference champ in the mile and is expected to contend again this year.

Senior Boyd and junior Tiffany Gunn lead a strong pack of Irish sprinters set to score big team points. Gunn, out of Little Rock, Ark., has qualified for the meet in the 60-meter hurdles as well as the 200, 400 and 500 meters.

Boyd has qualified for the 60-meter dash along with the 200 and 400 meters. She took third place in the 60-meter dash in last year's conference meet. The men's team should see its stiffest competition from Connecticut and Georgetown. Those squads finished second and third respectively in last year's meet and both return numerous placers.

The men will use the experience of veterans like senior Godwin Mbagwu and juniors Selim Nurudeen and Trevor McClain-Duer to keep their hold on the conference championship. Nurudeen, a native of Nigeria who placed second in the 60-meter hurdles last year's Big East meet. Presently he has the top time in the Big East in that event at 7.79 seconds.

Mbagwu is the defending conference outdoor champ in the long jump. Presently, he sits fourth in the Big East in that category while he is ranked first in the triple jump with a distance of 15.31 meters.

McClain-Duer will join sophomores Ryan Pestel as the favorites to win the 400-meters. Pestel ranks third in the conference with a time of 47.33 seconds while McClain-Duer is in eighth place at 48.00 seconds.

The Irish men have won every conference indoor and outdoor title since Notre Dame joined the Big East in 1996. Senior Todd Godwin and sophomore Kaleb Van Ort will try to keep the tradition alive as they currently rank third and fourth in the conference respectively.

Sophomore Thomas Chamney and junior Eric Mobley rank third and fourth in the 800 meters. Both are in the top ten in the conference in that category.

Senior Boyd and junior Tiffany Gunn lead a strong pack of Irish sprinters set to score big team points. Gunn, out of Little Rock, Ark., has qualified for the meet in the 60-meter hurdles as well as the 200, 400 and 500 meters.

Boyd has qualified for the 60-meter dash along with the 200 and 400 meters. She took third place in the 60-meter dash in last year's conference meet. The men's team should see its stiffest competition from Connecticut and Georgetown. Those squads finished second and third respectively in last year's meet and both return numerous placers.

The men will use the experience of veterans like senior Godwin Mbagwu and juniors Selim Nurudeen and Trevor McClain-Duer to keep their hold on the conference championship. Nurudeen, a native of Nigeria who placed second in the 60-meter hurdles last year's Big East meet. Presently he has the top time in the Big East in that event at 7.79 seconds.

Mbagwu is the defending conference outdoor champ in the long jump. Presently, he sits fourth in the Big East in that category while he is ranked first in the triple jump with a distance of 15.31 meters.

McClain-Duer will join sophomores Ryan Pestel as the favorites to win the 400-meters. Pestel ranks third in the conference with a time of 47.33 seconds while McClain-Duer is in eighth place at 48.00 seconds.

The Irish men have won every conference indoor and outdoor title since Notre Dame joined the Big East in 1996. Senior Todd Godwin and sophomore Kaleb Van Ort will try to keep the tradition alive as they currently rank third and fourth in the conference respectively.

Sophomore Thomas Chamney and junior Eric Mobley rank third and fourth in the 800 meters. Both are in the top ten in the conference in that category.

Pistons get Rasheed Wallace in 3-team deal

Rasheed Wallace, left, of the Atlanta Hawks and Kenyon Martin of the New Jersey Nets battle for a loose ball. Wallace was traded to Detroit Thursday in a multi-team deal.

Pistons were able to pull off the trade with the Hawks and Nets because of a clause in the three-team deal that allows them to acquire Wallace.

"It gives us a real shot to compete at the highest level in the NBA right now," Dumars said. "In a deal put together shortly before the NBA trading deadline, the Pistons sent center Zeljko Rebraca, guard Bob Sura and a first-round draft pick to the Hawks. That pick will come from Milwaukee this year if the Bucks make the playoffs.

"Rasheed is a heck of a player from Portland the salary cap after the season.

"That fact that we didn't have to break up our team and we were able to add the guy we did, it made it a no-brainer move for us," Dumars said. "It created cap space and we didn't mess with our core, so it was a great deal for us."

Irish to face sold-out arena crowd against 6-17 Pittsburgh

By JOE HETTLER

Muffet McGraw has 12,000 reasons to be concerned about Saturday's game against Pittsburgh, and none of them include the actual Panthers basketball team.

As part of its "Pack the Peterson" promotion, Pittsburgh sold tickets to the game against Notre Dame for $1. The tickets are sold out.

"You're always concerned when you go into a setting like that," McGraw said. "We haven't played that many games this year in that type of environment. Purdue and Tennessee were about as close as we could get to simulating that. Hopefully, some of those people at the game will be Irish fans.

Notre Dame (16-8, 9-3 in the Big East) looks to win its second straight road game for only the second time this season against a Pittsburgh (6-17, 2-11 Big East) team that lost 97-42 to Connecticut Tuesday night. The Panthers are in second-to-last place in the Big East and have lost nine straight games dating back to Jan. 14.

Notre Dame is in sole position of second-place in the conference, two games behind Connecticut. Notre Dame has two difficult games against Miami and Rutgers next week before ending the season with Syracuse. The Irish beat Miami earlier this year in that type of environment.

"We have to be aware of that," McGraw said. "We've got back up to the No. 2 seed, but now we have to protect it by doing our part and winning these last four games.

The Irish beat St. John's on the road Tuesday 69-56 behind a double-double from Le'Tania Severe and 15 points from Jeneka Joyce. There are 13-4 in their last 17 games and continue to build an impressive NCAA Tournament resume. Six of Notre Dame's wins have come against top-25 opponents.

"We still have four tough games to go, starting with Pittsburgh on Saturday," McGraw said. "As the Panthers are in second-to-last place in the Big East and have averaged more than eight points per game, Pittsburgh's offense has struggled all season, tallying just 57.2 points per game.

"Coach Brey said it best, he said 'that sometimes it takes certain teams longer to find their niche.'

Thomas and Quinn have also benefited from the open lanes. When one drives, defense either collapse and free up a 3-point shooter or defend the perimeter and give up a short-range jumper. And with the way the Irish are shooting lately — Notre Dame has made 43 percent of its 3-point shots — the Irish have shown they can take apart either a man-to-man defense (Connecticut or Seton Hall) or a zone (like the one Syracuse occasionally slipped into Monday)"

"Coach Brey said it best, he said 'that sometimes it takes certain teams longer to find their niche.'

"Unfortunately, we had to lose Turin to find it. We realized that opening the floor up and running five-out is the best way for us to run our offense."

Notre Dame has a three-game win streak heading into Saturday’s rematch against the Huskies.

During a spurt in which Notre Dame lost six of eight games, the Irish had difficulty preventing opposing teams from going on big runs that always seemed to steal the momentum away from the Irish.

Thomas, who tested the NBA Draft waters last summer, will face a similar choice this year. However, if he declares for the draft, rules say that he cannot withdraw his name and return to college. And while Brey said he doesn’t want to discuss Thomas’ NBA prospects during the season, he is an inkling as to what the Irish guard wants.

“I’m fully expecting to coach Chris Thomas again next year.”

Before her senior year she was named preseason Big East Defender of the Year. She was one of those kind of players that came in everyday and did her job. You didn’t know if she was having a good day or a bad day, Waldrum said.

Pruzinsky is the sixth Notre Dame athlete in nine years to receive the award, which is awarded to one male and one female athlete each year.

After struggling early in the year, Thomas is playing arguably his best basketball in a Notre Dame uniform. Over the last four games, including the win over Pittsburgh and a loss to Connecticut, Seton Hall and Syracuse, Thomas is averaging 26.5 points in four straight games, while shooting an astonishing 59 percent from the floor.

The kid has been fearless for us,” Brey said. “I want him to play daring because he has to play daring. Brey believes whom the head coach called the team’s best player in January, faced an unwarranted amount of criticism when he struggled early in the season. Many of those struggles came because Thomas was playing the opposing team’s top defender. In the past, he had to worry about shutting down prolific threats like Matt Carroll, David Graves and Dan Miller. This year, however, there can be nobody body at Thomas, who in turn shouled more of the responsibilities with Chris Carroll, David Graves and Jordan Comette.

Comette said, “We weren’t scoring much of those opportunities. But I think we’ve been very aware and getting back on defense and haven’t been given up those plays.”

So after a heartbreaking loss against Pittsburgh, Brey wanted the Irish to focus more on preventing the speedy Huskies from running circles around the Irish. The formula Notre Dame employed two weeks ago was effective Monday once again against Syracuse.

The Irish defense starts with guards Chris Thomas and Chris Quinn, whom Brey had to encourage not to cheat toward the basket to get rebounds. When they cheated toward the basket, other teams ran their fast break more effectively.

“We’d have one or two guys out of position, and that was making all the difference,” Comette said.

It continued with Torrian Jones finding a balance between knowing when to catch the boards and when to get back on defense. And finally, taking better shots meant the difference between having rebounds around the basket.

In general, the longer the shot attempt, the more likely the Irish were to fall back on defense because unpredictable caroms off the backboard on long shots gave teams opportunities to score in transition.

And while this approach meant that the Irish might be conceding offensive rebounds, that hasn’t been the case. The Irish are averaging just over 11 offensive rebounds in its last three wins, one less than their season average.

Brey believes this Notre Dame team is the most defensive-minded team in his four years at the helm of the Irish. But Notre Dame’s recent success comes in part because of the improved transition defense.

And Brey plans to run the drill at the start of every practice.

“It’s the first thing we do when we’re done with pre-practice shooting,” Brey said. “It gets us in the right frame of mind. We have a high basketball IQ, we just had to put in something more to work on it.”

Diversity is a catch-all word administrators, faculty and students use to describe something that many believe doesn't exist on Notre Dame's predominantly white, upper-middle class, Catholic, heterosexual campus. The present landscape is the most diverse in history, and Notre Dame has reached a crucial point in evolution as an academic institution.

Too frequently, discussion about diversity-related issues revolves around numbers and quotas, stereotypes and doctrines. Often ignored are the tangible examples of those who try to carve a niche in Notre Dame's largely homogeneous culture.

In this three-part series, which began Wednesday and continues today, The Observer illuminates the experiences of a few who struggle daily to assert themselves in the face of actual and theoretical obstacles.

Today, The Observer profiles the administrators responsible for charting the course of Notre Dame's future and the students who could symbolize the future of Notre Dame.
THE DIRECTOR OF ADMISSIONS
He wants to make Notre Dame a better Notre Dame.

As a student in the '60s and a father in the '90s, he believed Notre Dame lacked something key to making it better. Now, as an administrator in 2004, he is committed to filling this void by making Notre Dame more diverse.

Dan Saracino, associate provost and the director of admissions, graduated from the University in 1969 able to count on one hand the number of blacks in his class.

Through enhanced recruiting, the University once known as a haven for white European Catholics is a far cry from the dire situation it was in during the pre-civil rights era. Today, it boasts a freshman class of which 21 percent are minorities, the most diverse in history.

However, Saracino believes more can be done.

"The primary goal I have is to improve diversity," Saracino said. "I want to make Notre Dame a better Notre Dame, and diversity, in its broadest sense, will make Notre Dame better."

For Saracino, improving diversity is not a narrow endeavor. It expands beyond the typical definitions such as race to more personal characteristics, such as whether the applicant’s parents are educators or whether the applicant would be a first-generation college student.

The man who makes diversifying Notre Dame his mission took an indirect route into the field of higher-education admissions. Upon graduating from Notre Dame, he had planned to attend law school but opted to defer for a year to work in the admissions office. A year later, his request for another deferment was denied, and he remained an admissions counselor.

"It was the first time I thought I was in a profession," Saracino said. "I just thought I was doing service for Notre Dame."

Saracino’s service focused on building minority recruitment, and Notre Dame implemented a program designed to increase this. Today, that program boasts its own department within the Office of Admissions, with individual counselors who specifically recruit black, Asian and Hispanic minorities. The program also relies on its minority alumni board to recruit area students who would be a good fit at Notre Dame.

"What we are doing is still the same as back then — trying to reach those young men and women who should be hearing the story of Notre Dame and are not," Saracino said.

In 1977, he left Notre Dame to become the director of admissions at Santa Clara University in California. During his 20-year absence from Notre Dame, the University saw its minority numbers steadily rise coupled with the closing gap between the percentage of men and women who were admitted. Though Notre Dame’s numbers might have increased relative to diversity, there was still something missing.

His daughters, who attended Notre Dame in the 90s, often returned home telling him that Notre Dame provided a quality education but was lacking something due to the absence of diversity.

"My daughters didn’t realize they had diversity [in California] until it was taken away from them," Saracino said.

In 1997, Saracino returned to Notre Dame as director of admissions with a mission to continue to improve Notre Dame and to make it more diverse.

But that word is not limited to race for Saracino. He believes that Notre Dame needs to construct its incoming classes so they are more ethnically, socioeconomically and geographically diverse.

Saracino denies claims that the University’s desire to become more diverse is an attempt to become more like Stanford or institutions in the Ivy League.

"We are not trying to be something we are not," Saracino said. "We respect them but we don’t want to emulate them. If it means it does get more comparable, so be it."

He said he frequently hears from alumni who complain that their children have not been accepted at Notre Dame. His response is that Notre Dame has become more difficult and the admissions office will uphold this standard and not sacrifice the overall quality of the class.

Preferential aid packages are offered to ethnic minorities, Notre Dame Scholars, children of educators, first-generation college students and other students who are desirable for Notre Dame.

Though Notre Dame usually can recruit these desirable students from elite college prep schools, Saracino believes this limits the dynamic of the class.

The University needs to reach out to the smaller schools that are scattered across the country, he said, to create a more diverse applicant pool that is still committed to academics, service and faith.

This includes reaching out to first-generation college students to increase the socio-economic diversity of Notre Dame’s undergraduates. The admissions office originally believed that it would find first-generation students through its minority recruitment program, but Saracino said they soon discovered that many parents of minorities had attended college due to changes in the civil rights era.

To even further diversify the applicant pool, Saracino said, Notre Dame is now a gender- and religious-blind institution.

He linked the religious and ethnic diversity to the expansion of the varsity athletics program and said recruiters are after the best student-athlete — not the best Catholics.

Though the percentage of Catholics in recent incoming classes usually hovers around 83 percent, Saracino said religious affiliation does not affect an applicant’s chances and that the percentage of non-Catholic admitted students reflects the applicant pool. "I’d rather have a Jewish or Methodist student who believes strongly in his faith than just an applicant who checks the Catholic box," Saracino said.

Saracino believes Notre Dame would not have been a top-20 academic institution when he attended as a student because it was too limited as only a white, Catholic university. He said this is not necessarily a bad thing, as a passion for Notre Dame and community service existed but the University needed to evolve.

Since his early days in the admissions office Saracino said his mission has been the same — to make Notre Dame a better Notre Dame by diversifying it. Though he would never trade his '60s education, he said the best thing he saw a decade after graduation was co-education. Since the '70s, he said he has whole-heartedly believed that Notre Dame is a better institution because of its commitment to increase the amount of ethnically diverse and international students.

Saracino returned to Notre Dame to help diversity evolve even further and believes that the future Notre Dame student will have a face that is a mosaic.

"The future is a student who is a mosaic in the truest sense," he said. "You couldn’t say it was male or female or white, black, brown or Asian. It would be a true mosaic with a hundred different experiences."
THE COORDINATOR OF SPRING VISITATION

"The reality is the form might be special and unique, but the students that these prospectives are meeting ... that is what Notre Dame is about."

When Gil Martinez hears people criticize Spring Visitation Weekend, he laughs. "I always kind of chuckle a little bit when I hear criticism — people saying, 'You know, this isn't really what Notre Dame is about,'" said Martinez, the coordinator of Spring Visitation Weekend. "The reality is the form might be special and unique, but the students that these prospectives are meeting ... that is what Notre Dame is about."

Martinez, a 1984 Notre Dame graduate, worked for University admissions from 1988 to 1993. He returned in the summer of 2003 and now specializes in Hispanic recruitment. When the former Spring Visitation Weekend coordinator took another job, Martinez was asked to replace him.

"It's something that I feel, personally, very committed to," Martinez said of the diversity recruitment event. "This place is so special in terms of opportunities that it grants people." He knows firsthand. When Martinez entered Notre Dame in the fall of 1980, he was the first person in his entire family to attend college — much less to leave his hometown or home state of New Mexico.

"It was just great — a great experience, in terms of the support, not only from friends, but from the University, as well — especially making the transition from basically a non-college family background," Martinez said. "I found that it was really helpful in just helping me to maneuver through the bureaucracy through the administrative tasks that I needed to do in order to graduate."

It is his own experience and subsequent confidence in the welcoming atmosphere of Notre Dame, Martinez said, that he carries with him when he speaks to Hispanic and other minority students.

"They want to be in a place where they are going to feel supported, whether it be by peers, administration or faculty, and I believe that this place does it," Martinez said. "There is a stability here, and it's a stability based on a very good philosophy."

The point of Spring Visitation is to show students this stability and environment, Martinez said. The University flies in approximately 160 competitive minority students — black, Asian, Hispanic and Native American — who have never visited campus before. They are hosted by current Notre Dame students, and the weekend, at the end of March, includes presentations by speakers — football head coach Tyrone Willingham, for example, spoke last year — and sessions with faculty and administrators. The various cultural events concentrated during the weekend are celebratory and entertaining for prospectives, he said, but they are not the sole focus of the visit.

"Our students, just in being who they are ... those seniors in high school are really observant about that," Martinez said. "They get a sense the tone of the student body is one that's caring — a group that cares for each other, a group that is success-oriented, a group that is not so much going to be stealing your biology notes before a major exam."

Martinez said that, every year, the visiting students comment most on their time in the dorms, in the dining halls and with Notre Dame students, in general. He said they realize the presentations and ethnic events are not typical of everyday life at the University; while they appreciate the entertainment, Martinez said the prospectives are more concerned about what their personal experiences will be like.

"It is a special weekend and, in a way, it is unique relative to what a student will experience every other weekend, but it's not different, say, than a student that would come on a football weekend, where there impression of Notre Dame is that football weekend," Martinez said.

Martinez said he hopes this year's Spring Visitation Weekend will prove as successful as those in previous years. Last year, approximately 74 percent of the visiting students chose to attend Notre Dame, he said.

"The Spring Visitation Weekend is a key component, though not the only one, for the increase of the number of [diverse] students willing to bring themselves here," Martinez said.

"People are, more and more, coming to an understanding that this is who we are, this is what we're about, in terms of helping all students that are academically competitive."
MINORITY ADMINISTRATOR
"By the experiences that I've had and that I've done and what I've brought, I think it adds to that puzzle, if you will, of creating that total picture of a diverse campus and a diverse community."

Roberto Gutierrez

Immediately after picking up his 93-year-old mother at the airport last year, Roberto Gutierrez decided against giving her a South Bend tour or even a tour of her new room in the family's recently-purchased home. Instead, he brought her to campus.

"She, of all people, always had a good sense of the pulse of a community," Gutierrez said. "She said, 'You know, this feels like home.'"

Gutierrez agreed. It was that same sense of family and home that led him to leave South Texas for South Bend and accept the position of vice president for public affairs and communication at the University.

Gutierrez has dedicated his life to serving the Latino community through media and communications. He helped promote the first national Latino newspaper for Catholics in the United States, co-founded the Hispanic Telecommunications Network in 1982 (which produced the only national Catholic evangelization series televised for U.S. Latinos) and received an honorary doctorate from Notre Dame in 1999.

"That has really been a hallmark, if you will, of my career, my life and the aspirations that I've had over the years," he said. "To help promote the values — the best values — that the Latino community brings to the table in this country.

"We do bring values of family, values of faith, values of language," he said.

A first-generation Mexican-American, Gutierrez grew up, attended college and established his career in San Antonio. But he left that city to respond "to a call to be of service."

"Being able to do storytelling on television is probably the best job that any person could have in the world," Gutierrez said. "When I had done that for 20 years, I realized that God is calling me in a direction at this time in my life.

Gutierrez said he feels that University President Father Edward Malloy has set Notre Dame in the right direction, and this belief led him to enthusiastically accept the post.

"I think he saw the need to try to diversify the campus and continues to do so in many ways, adding faculty and staff that represent, really, what the Church is in America," Gutierrez said.

"Do we have a long way to go? Absolutely. But I think my coming here was really a response to an invitation and... by the experiences that I've had and that I've done and what I've brought, I think it adds to that puzzle, if you will, of creating that total picture of a diverse campus and a diverse community."

The International Student

"People are a lot more comfortable with each other [in Nicaragua]. Back home there is no difference if you're white or black."

Elena Lacayo

Elena Lacayo may blend easily into the Notre Dame landscape, may have been born in the United States and may appear to be white. But this sophomore from Managua, Nicaragua, surprises many when they discover she is both a minority and international student.

"People don't know anything about me and they automatically assume I'm white," said Lacayo. "I consider myself bicultural."

Because of her background, however, Lacayo's perspective on minorities, diversity and student life at Notre Dame remains unique.

Though childhood experiences prepared her in some sense for student life at an American university, Lacayo said she found it difficult to understand the social atmosphere at Notre Dame, where gender relations often seemed strained and barriers appeared to exist between campus minority groups and the general student body.

"People are a lot more comfortable with each other [in Nicaragua]," she said. "Back home there is no difference if you're white or black."

Compared to Central American culture, Lacayo said specific terms used in the United States to describe race and ethnicity didn't make sense either.

"I asked these girls in my form if it bothered them if I described them as black... Both were African-American and I started talking to them about the term African-American," said Lacayo.

In this small group, discussing whether "African-American" or "black" accurately described some minority groups in the United States feels safe. Lacayo said.

"I asked them if they spoke with me because I was asking or because I wasn't white... but they admitted that they were open with me because I was a minority," she said.

But Lacayo said she enjoys talking with other minority and international students about race and culture, and feels like she can fit in well with a wide range of ethnic groups on campus. Among white students however, she finds this willingness to talk sometimes lacking at Notre Dame.

"A person has to be forced to step out of their bubble [and] the minorities are the ones that concede. They're the ones that have to adjust," Lacayo said.

"They have to live in a foreign world. I understand why [this] happens — I just wish people were more aware of it."
I guess I was nervous because it was different and I was white. Looking back it seems kind of silly.

THE MAJORITY MINORITY

"I guess I was nervous because it was different and I was white. Looking back it seems kind of silly."

Will Herbert

STORY BY MEGHANNE DOWNES

Will Herbert loves to dance and so does the first friend he made at Notre Dame, Mark Tupas. Through their mutual love of dancing and friendship, Herbert discovered a new culture and formed a group of friends in which he found himself — a white male — to be ironically a minority.

Though Herbert was used to only dancing at parties, Tupas drew upon his heritage and took his dancing to the stage. After much convincing, Herbert joined the Filipino American Student Organization and soon found himself performing traditional Filipino dances for the club’s spring show, Fiestang.

Herbert said going to dance practices was easy because he was there to dance; yet he was still nervous. "I guess I was nervous because it was different and I was white," Herbert said. "Looking back it seems kind of silly."

Herbert said he did not want to be the "big dumb white kid" who looked out of place during performances. However, he knew he would stand out and had to be perfect with his dancing.

The more he danced, the more friendships he developed and Herbert realized that it made sense to become more involved with FASO because of whom he became friends with.

He admitted that every once in a while he and his friends will joke about how he, a white student, is in an active participant in an ethnic club, but he said he always feels welcome and his presence has never been an issue.

However, people outside of FASO have questioned his presence. Herbert thinks these are rather natural questions as it is unusual on this campus for students to do what is not expected of them.

"I think sometimes I get that resistance," Herbert said. "It will be a real anonymous thing like Spring [Visitation]. I have always been a host and well the prospectives seem a little surprised. Though they are my peers, they are younger, so they don’t say anything.

However, not everyone conceals their suspicions or suppresses their opinions.

At activities fair night and other programming events he participates in, he said there are always students, including Asian students, who give him puzzled looks and are reluctant to listen to his pitches to become involved in FASO because it seems awkward to them that the face of an Asian ethnic club would not be Asian.

Herbert learned to overlook the bewildered glances and became more involved in the organization. He helped plan In Focus and danced traditional dances such as the Magalalik and Tinikling at Asian Allure, Fiestang and various other MSPS events.

Though Herbert may not be Asian, he does rely upon his own experience to successfully draw students into the club.

"It’s the quietest ones who are on the edge that you bring into the fold and try to make them feel as welcome as much I was — particularly for a lot of mixed race students," Herbert said.

Herbert said there are not many other non-Asian students like himself who are involved with FASO; however, this ethnic boundary does not simply exist between Asians and non-Asians, but on a more micro-level amongst Asians.

Though there are several non-Filipino Asian students who participate, Herbert said this is a rather significant step for these students, as their heritages and ethnicities are distinct.

Herbert said that one of the problems at Notre Dame is that students do not realize that diversity is not something that is a given but that requires being open minded and seeking out this diversity.

"One of the most common complaints is ‘why do all the black kids sit together in the dining hall?’" Herbert said, "They probably ask the same thing. ‘You have to be willing to put yourself in the situation where you are the minority in order to learn.’"

He said Notre Dame is an interesting place for diversity due to its small concentrated community, which creates much solidarity amongst minority ethnic groups as opposed to larger state schools, which are more culturally diverse, where ethnic clubs are not as predominant or strong.

"In terms of diversity here, Notre Dame isn’t the place to go if you want to walk around and see a rainbow of faces," Herbert said.

"If you are really into something, you can find people of similar interests who are of different color."

For Herbert, his interest in dancing acted as the bridge.

Herbert said this is the mentality he tries to spread amongst his white friends. Though his white friends, who do attend events, usually do not take an active interest in joining FASO.

Herbert said he believes the socializing aspect between his two groups of friends is beneficial because it at least brings them together so they can start to see life from a different perspective and to begin to talk about issues.

"My opinion is [diversity] is something that has got to be worked on. People shouldn’t avoid the school. I think it’s a contribution we can make. I didn’t come here because of the football but because it was a good school. A lot of people come here looking for a specific type of environment — I expected to come here finding good academics and to find myself — something that I have done."
THE QUEER STUDENT ATHLETE

"I'm tired of being a marginalized voice. I'm tired of being alienated. I'm a part of the community too."

Jeneka Joyce

S T O R Y  B Y  C L A I R E  H E I N I N G E R

As a scholarship athlete, Jeneka Joyce is already part of a select crowd on campus. But it’s another group that she belongs to that truly sets her apart — students who don’t hesitate to talk about their homosexuality.

"It’s not a big deal, it’s not some crisis," Joyce said simply, confident that her own choices and her own life are resolutely balanced. "I speak up. If people are mute about it, there is no way that change can come about."

Speaking up wasn’t always that easy. When Joyce began questioning her sexuality during her first two years at Notre Dame, she felt as if she was the only one who didn’t fit the straight-laced image the University’s identity prescribed. It didn’t help that all homosexual students seemed to be classified under the same don’t-ask-don’t-tell heading, since Joyce firmly describes herself as "queer," a term she said is “pretty much all-encompassing of sexualities that are different from heterosexuality,” memories of confusion and isolation still linger.

"Now it’s different because I’m involved in the gay/lesbian/bisexual community," she said. "I don’t-ask-don’t-tell heading, since Joyce firmly disagrees that sexuality can fit into a neat little box."

A clear-cut sexuality, she said, "is not necessarily the case — I think it’s more on some kind of continuum." But while the senior now openly describes herself as "queer," a term she said is "pretty much all-encompassing of sexualities that are different from heterosexuality," memories of confusion and isolation still linger.

"Now it’s different because I’m involved in the gay/lesbian/bisexual community," she said. "I don’t know a lot of people. But when I wasn’t involved and I didn’t know any other gays on campus, I didn’t think anyone was — it definitely seems like there are no gays at Notre Dame."

However, several conversations at the end of Joyce’s sophomore year revealed just the opposite. Talking with her close friends, she realized that although gays on campus were still a mostly silent minority, she was anything but alone.

"In college, you’re growing, your self-identity is becoming more solidified, you’re going through lots of changes and coming into yourself," she said, recalling the talks that opened her eyes and strengthened her resolve. "It turned out that some people I was already friends with were bi, and when we started talking about things, I kind of opened up."

It was this support system that gave her the confidence to seek out other students facing the same struggle. Now the co-chair of OutreachND, Joyce helps provide a forum for what she calls a “tight-knit circle” of about 40 non-heterosexual students to relax, socialize and voice their frustrations about everyday life on a conservative campus. Strength in numbers, she said, has become a powerful asset. "I think we’re finally making enough noise—we have enough people who aren’t afraid to wear ‘Gay Irish’ or ‘Gay’s Fine by Me’ shirts" around campus, she said. "We have enough people willing to push the envelope and to take a stand."

Despite the courage displayed by her peers, Joyce admits that pushing towards acceptance at Notre Dame is a slow and painful process. And while she is excited about the recent public strides that the University has made in the direction of tolerance — listing off the Notre Dame Queer Film Festival, OutreachND and the Gay/Straight Alliance as powerful indicators — she is concerned that students’ casual snide remarks still cause a lot of private pain.

Joyce said she defends herself and other less vocal victims of such stereotypes — albeit with a more politically correct retort than she sometimes wishes. "I say that there’s a lot of variability within our society and I feel it’s unfair to stereotype someone because of how they look or how you perceive their behavior," Joyce said.

"What else can you say, ‘Shut the bell up?’"

No matter how civil the response, the important thing is that Joyce responds. Unlike those who suffer in silence — a circumstance to which she can relate — she now refuses to remain hidden in the campus background. And she knows that just because she might not fit any mold, and definitely does not fit the Notre Dame mold, it doesn’t mean that she doesn’t belong.

"I’m tired of being a marginalized voice. I’m tired of being alienated," Joyce said. "I’m a part of the community too."

In the public eye, she is also a part of the basketball team. But team life, she said, is something she keeps completely separate from her sexuality, and asked The Observer not to speak with her teammates.

"When it comes to personal things, I keep some things to myself," she said. "I go about my business and go to school like everyone else ... (sexualit) is not an issue."

Mindful of these separate spheres, Joyce believes there is a time and a place for vocally pushing acceptance to the forefront. "Publicity is very good," she said, addressing the controversy that arose when Notre Dame chose to host the Queer Film Festival this month. "These are issues Notre Dame needs to recognize — we’re everywhere. A little acknowledgment would be nice so we don’t feel like outcasts in the community here."

She characterized the acknowledgment earned on campus thus far as minimal, but still highly significant. Although she called steps like the Festival "baby steps" toward recognizing and accepting alternative lifestyles, she said that the strength of voices like her own is still a vast improvement from years past.

"I think it’s good to have voices of dissent [that] are not in line," Joyce said, adding realistically, "And any step forward at Notre Dame is tremendous."

AN ATHEIST

AN ATHEIST

"I no longer needed a god or needed the faith in my life, so it just kind of fell out of its traditional place."

When Adam Loverro's friends and family visit Notre Dame, he brings them to Mass at the Basilica. He takes them on the usual campus tour, highlighting the University's trademark spots, such as the Grotto. But to him, personally, the religious locations hold no special meaning. At one of the most vocally religious institutions in the country, Loverro is an atheist.

"I know it means something to them, and so if they're visiting or if they'd like to go, then I have no problem going," Loverro said of Basilica Mass.

"The Grotto's a really nice place, and it's one of the places people come to see," he said. "If I'm giving someone a tour, I'll bring them down there if there's time. I won't avoid it."

But the senior has only been to the Grotto on about four or five occasions, mostly when giving such tours. He feels no need to go there and pray, because, after he began high school, he decided there was no need for God in his life.

"After taking a history course and learning all about the Protestant Reformation ... all of that stuff, the history of the Catholic Church, the history of every church ... I was no longer enticed by the whole idea," Loverro said, also explaining that he believes "the Bible is wrought with inconsistencies."

"I no longer needed a god or needed the faith in my life, so it just kind of fell out of its traditional place."

Loverro was baptized a Roman Catholic, and he attended church regularly until about fifth grade, when his family moved and their routine became disrupted.

"I didn't go for the next three or four years," Loverro said.

And then he entered high school and rethought his religion, and his entire Catholic identity fell by the wayside. He expressed no interest in being confirmed, and his family did not pressure him.

"I don't think that my belief is a reaction to the Church's failure, but more of a [view that] there's nothing in God, himself or herself or itself, that is strictly what I need to determine my own set of moral values and ethics," Loverro said. "I didn't see the purpose of devoting myself to one or any of the faiths."

"I took what I agreed with and what I believe in morally and ethically from the teachings, but ... I don't use God as a basis for those practices."

Despite his disregard for faith and religion, however, Loverro chose to attend college at Notre Dame. After visiting campus during his senior year of high school, Loverro said he was struck by "the way I was welcomed and the beauty of the campus."

"I just really liked the feeling of the place," he said. "It's the community here and not the faith ... that I was attracted to."

And it is that same "community aspect" which occasionally draws him to Sunday Mass in his dorm, Zahm Hall. Loverro said, "I really enjoy Mass at Zahm," he said.

"During the homily, I'd say I always listen to what the priest says, and usually it's a message that can be taken without the context of faith," Loverro said.

The phrase remains Tyrone Willingham’s most basic mantra. He says it so often that the words are cliché when they pour out of his mouth, and the writers who spend day after day around the football coach smirk and discard the quote.

But if they knew where it came from, what Willingham endured both as a child and a professional, then they would know the 50-year-old’s favorite expression, “the best player will play,” isn’t just a trite sports phrase.

Willingham says it because he believes he was once the best player.

Day has long passed, and Notre Dame’s first black head coach in any sport refuses to discuss specific instances of the racial battles of his past. But the sting on his face is evident when he talks about segregation in his hometown, when he talks about watching coaches start white players over black players and when he talks about the Bert fact that only five of the 117 Division I-A football coaches are black.

“You know there’s a better way,” Willingham said. “You know life doesn’t have to exist that way.”

But for the longest time, it did.

Willingham grew up in Jacksonville, N.C., a city filled with hostile race relations and segregated schools. Every morning, he rode the bus to the minority school, more than a mile past the white school that was within walking distance of his house.

He daily lived in a mostly black neighborhood, and in the early years of his life, Willingham rarely felt segregation’s effects. But as he grew older, he began to ask questions. Why are their books better? Why do we have to walk-on to the Spartan football team.

Willingham generally avoids discussing specific instances played together without racial prejudice.

Willingham prefers to show his beliefs in the way he lives his life, the Irish coach simply met the challenges directly. And instead of trying to get diversity of interests played together without racial prejudice.

“I make sure that as a head coach that I run a program that none of those things make a difference. His religion makes no difference. Only his ability to perform and help the team matters. To create a world where there is true equality based solely on your playing, that is the future.”

That mentality is classic Willingham — a forward-thinking coach who refuses to dwell on the past. But the very fact that Willingham refers to his hopes for a future quality and not his analysis of a present one implies that the Irish coach believes society still has much to accomplish.

Willingham points to the fact that nobody brought up race when he decided to replace black quarterback Carlyle Holiday with white quarterback Brady Quinn midway through Notre Dame’s 2003 season — a situation that shows remarkable progress to Willingham’s own high school experiences. And while Willingham generally avoids discussing specific instances of racial problems, he’s not afraid to criticize the fact that only four percent of all Division I-A football coaches are minorities.

That to that, he attributes a mentality against hiring minority coaches that exists in some athletic offices around the country. He felt that mindset when he was an assistant coach and his opinions were ignored — he wouldn’t say at which school — and believes that attitude still persists.

“You have to look at the numbers, and that’s what I’ve said for years and years,” Willingham said. “It’s an easy thing to adjust. You gotta hire the best people. That’s how simple it is. Whether they are Asian, African-American, it doesn’t matter.”

Willingham disagrees with those who claim that Notre Dame’s decision to hire a black coach was largely a public-relations move in the wake of the George O’Leary fiasco. On the contrary, the third-year Irish coach said, Notre Dame took a risk in hiring a minority when hiring a white coach would have been the safer move.

“I think it might worked the other way, that [race] was more of a detriment,” Willingham said. “It creates more of a split among those who might have an interest in the issue. ... If there is a decision to be made, it’s easier to go with the safe decision than one that involves a diversity of interests.”

But as to why it took 162 years for Notre Dame to hire its first black head coach, Willingham declines to answer. “Only the people who have been here and been in a position to hire are able to speak on that issue,” he said.

The black Methodist is grateful for the warm reception he has received from the white Catholic Notre Dame community. But as one of just five minority coaches — UCLA’s Karl Dorrell, San Jose State’s Fitz Hill, New Mexico State’s Tony Samuel and Mississippi State’s Sylvester Croom are the others — Willingham argues that he is in a group of coaches who are held to a higher level of scrutiny. Where the pressure comes from — other hopeful minority candidates, high-level administrators, fans — he doesn’t say. He only says the pressure exists.

“As a minority, you’re held to a much higher standard than anyone else in terms of your transition,” Willingham said. “Even though, in many situations, you may be as qualified as other coaches. Everybody would say that’s not fair.”

But what would Willingham say?

“I would say that’s not fair.”

Then again, few things in life have been fair for Willingham. Faced with racial oppression his entire life, the Irish coach simply met the challenges directly. And instead of trying to get others to change via speeches and pontificating about the state of race in college athletics, Willingham prefers to show his beliefs in the way he runs his football program.

“There’s a saying on our football team that a man with a backbone is more valuable than a thousand with a wishbone,” the coach said. “You don’t convince anybody. It’s not a matter of who follows, it’s how you value yourself. Do you really stand up for what is right?”

Edward Malloy

STORY BY ANDREW THAGARD

When Father Edward Malloy reflects on Notre Dame and his time here, he does so through a variety of perspectives — as a former undergraduate student in the 1960's, as a professor in the Department of Theology since 1974 and as the University president since 1986. Malloy's years at Notre Dame have allowed him to become intimately familiar with many aspects of the University, including the concept of diversity at Notre Dame — a central tenet of his administration. Since Malloy took the helm of the University 17 years ago, the percentage of underrepresented minorities at Notre Dame has increased from 7.5 to more than 20 percent.

"That's a big change," he says with an obvious sense of pride. "In that span of time, that's a big change." It's also a change that hasn't come easily, according to Malloy, who must balance Notre Dame's unique identity as a Catholic institution with a rapidly evolving concept of diversity.

Indeed, when he was an undergraduate student, the number of underrepresented minorities in attendance was "miniscule" and diversity existed mainly in the socioeconomic sense as applicants were lured to the University by lower tuition rates and its Catholic identity.

Today, the University continues to attract a unique blend of students from different economic classes, including minority students. These efforts, Malloy said, have been facilitated in part by an increased commitment to financial aid.

"We've been able to say in recent years, 'if you get into Notre Dame, we can put together a financial aid package that will allow you to attend,'" he said.

In addition to an increased presence of minority students, Notre Dame also boasts diversity on the intellectual and political levels and increasingly in representation of students who choose to study here from international locales, he said.

In other areas including the religious and philosophical sense, Malloy said, the Notre Dame is less diverse — something that the University president doesn't necessarily believe is bad.

In this regard, Notre Dame must also honor the commitment to its Catholic identity — and in doing so, Malloy said, it contributes to the diversity among institutions of higher learning in the United States.

"What I like is that we're remaining faithful to our mission and sense of purpose," he said. "I believe that we have put a huge amount of effort into exploring what it means to be a Catholic university and looking at dimensions of that and trying to foster it over time."

While Malloy is pleased with the progress in promoting diversity that has occurred during his tenure, he's quick to point out that Notre Dame still has a lot of work to do in this regard, especially in hiring minority administrators and faculty members — an effort that must begin at the departmental level, he said.

"We still have a long way to go," he said. "It takes a University-wide effort to diversify the faculty."

Malloy said that he believes that his work in making increased diversity a "team" effort and emphasis on opportunities to learn about different perspectives outside the classroom, has simultaneously eased the adjustment that minority students face and increased the promotion of diversity among the general student body.

"I encourage people with common backgrounds to get together socially in an informal way," he said. "I think the social networks of support are really helpful for diversity here."

In the future, Malloy said that he wants Notre Dame to reflect the different aspects of diversity he highlighted in its undergraduate student population. While his future goals do not include specific quotas, he believes that the University's direction should be shaped in part by the changing demographics of the nation and the U.S. Catholic Church.

"We don't project precise numbers but we set targets and goals for ourselves, and we try to get as close as we can," he said. "We will continue to try to closely monitor the demographics of the United States."

Malloy doesn't know what exactly the country or Catholic Church will look like in the future from a demographic perspective, but he believes that it will be shaped by an increased Latino presence, particularly Mexican-Americans. This and other national trends should be reflected in Notre Dame's student population, he said.

At the same time, however, he believes that certain University traditions — including priority given to children of alumni — should be maintained and will serve as an asset in increasing minority recruitment as alumni choose to send their children here.

"That's a variable that I expect to be kept up and that will have an influence as well," he said. Diversity, Malloy said, isn't a definitive goal to be reached but a never-ending process that requires a degree of flexibility and adaptability. He's confident, however, that the University is up to the challenge.

"We want to consistently re-evaluate ourselves on the basis of factoring information to achieve a combination making the most sense as a Catholic institution and as a national institution," he said. "We've been very fortunate because the people connected to Notre Dame... pride Notre Dame's distinctive mission and identity."
DIVERSITY: 162 YEARS AND COUNTING

When Father Edward Sorin founded the University in 1842, diversity at Notre Dame was not yet a catchphrase, a controversy or an aspiration — it was an oxymoron. The students of the early years were male. They were white. They were straight. They were Catholic. And there was no question about it.

Questions, as we all know, arrived. Questions persist. Questions arose about who belongs here and to what extent. Questions now arise about diversity itself. One thing is certain — diversity means more than these categories. Narrowing its definition to sex, race, religion and sexual preference, though clearly the most glaring sources of discrimination, is only a starting point. While this series has largely focused on these four areas, diversity as a term and as a goal is more far-reaching. Unlike the uniformity that characterized our campus at the beginning, it cannot be nailed down.

The University's mission dictated a specific reputation, and attracted a specific kind of student. But while its foundation — and much of its formation — was characterized by homogeneity, several individuals along the way provided ripples of change.

President Emeritus Father Theodore Hesburgh was one of those individuals, as he became a vocal supporter of both civil rights legislation and coeducation during his tenure. Deeply aware of the difference between the appearance of diversity on the surface and true interaction, he encouraged students and faculty, then and now, to ground their beliefs about equal rights in Catholic values.

Influential figures were not all as visible as Hesburgh, but often they needed to share in his resolve. Wayne Edmonds, the first minority to broach another sphere inseparable from the Notre Dame name — football — endured racial epithets from fans and segregation during Southern road trips. Josephine Ford, the first woman faculty member to receive tenure, watched priests get promoted and eventually filed a sexual discrimination suit against the University. David Garrick, the most well-known priest to publicize his homosexuality at Notre Dame, felt so ostracized that he resigned in protest.

As lines began to blur and barriers began to topple, standing up for diversity became less about standing alone. Current University President Edward Malloy and Director of Admissions Dan Saracino are united in their emphasis of economic diversity, as evidenced by an increased emphasis on financial aid. Both also insist that minority recruitment does not have an adverse effect on Notre Dame traditions — and that the future mosaic of students will reflect both the University's consistent character and the United States' changing demographics.

The stories of unique students of today reflect a similar theme of solidarity and strength. Nahyan Fancy can afford to speak out for Muslims because of the United Muslim Association standing behind him. Rick Friedman can feel comfortable discussing his sexuality because of the OutreachND support system that offers him refuge. The Notre Dame community of today is the most diverse in University history — not only in its breadth, but also, tellingly, in its depth.

Despite these strides, cynicism and disillusionment remain — often because the University has not done enough to diminish them. It is easy to identify clusters in the dining hall that are grouped by race. The University's anti-discrimination clause still does not explicitly include homosexuals. We cannot narrow diversity to four areas, yet the "norms," as we perceive them, are still firmly entrenched. In large part, Notre Dame admits that it still has a long way to go to accomplish its goals.

However, to dismiss the exceptional individuals showcased in this series as blips on the uniformity radar would be selling them short. Just like in 1842, diversity at Notre Dame is not a catchphrase. It has been, is now and will be about tangible experiences, authentic stories, and above all, real people.
