Mr. Editor: I must begin by informing you that having derived much amusement as well as instruction from your "Vacation Trip" which forms the first article on the first page of the first number of the present volume of the Scholastic, I am moved to rush precipitately into "vacation-trip" literature myself, and give some account of my vagaries during that usually hot, dull and unprofitable period of the scholastic year.

Having heard of the cholera, I set forth, like a knight of a more chivalrous age, to bear the lion in his den. The headquarters of the monster were said to be in Nashville. I went thither; the monster fled at my coming. I found his last victim expiring. Nashville is a pretty place, and enjoys a perpetual spring. Those who are milled by this expression to expect a continuance of the vernal season will, however, find their expectations disposed of in a very summary manner before the sun enters Leo. The spring is a chalybeate. Heard of cholera in Chattanooga, but having failed to find it in Nashville, I deemed that chat a Bubia-chalybeate. I heard of cholera in Chattanooga, but having missed that metropolitan city and gone west out on the wild and trackless prairie, where the prairie-chicken fleeth and the sportsman mourneth over his bad luck. Don't ask what I shot. That is a delicate question, and one calculated to shatter my nervous system if obtruded too abruptly upon me. I'm getting to be an old man now and I can't stand as much as I could once. Besides, September has now come, and there are matters of weight to be attended to; the Sun is about to enter Libra, and Libra therefore must not be regarded as a Spring Balance. We knew a man once who imprudently bought a Spring Balance on the 31st of May, and the following day he lost his equilibrium. There are a great many kinds of Balances besides the constellation Libra. When you balance to your partner calisthenically, you generally swing or cheat; but when you cheat your partner in balancing the ledger, you ought to swing for it, but you don't in this humanitarian age. We met a man Friday (please punctuate this so as to preclude all suggestiveness of Robinson Crusoe) whom we asked if he had seen Schuyler Colfax in South Bend. He said he hadn't, but he had been Ben weighed in Mishawaka.

An expeditious way of balancing your Cash Book consists in poising the volume on the tip of your left ear, and maintaining it thus suspended in mid air by a judicious assertion. September is as good a month as any other to get married in, and a good assertion he will say he means above the level of the sea, or at least he are in course of erection; for so I left them. I hope they will prove incentives to devotion rather than Wayne-glory, but at present, all I can say is, that if you ask a resident how high they are, he is liable to tell you anything up to 2,500,000 feet; and if you doubt his assertion he will say he means above the level of the sea, or something else. Some of them relieve the exuberance of their exultation by ascending to the summits. Alas for human nature!

We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; we madly go ballooning up,—discover nothing new; we often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; we madly go ballooning up,—discover nothing new; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; We often seek advancement when there's no advantage there; the bear that climbs the highest pole is not the polar bear; rows the scope of his mental vision to a very limited range of inquiry and investigation. The mind may be wholly concentrated upon the natural and exact sciences, and a proficiency and a deep knowledge of them may be acquired. But will such an education be complete when the sciences of the moral world—philosophy, theology, psychology—which have for their object man and God, are excluded or entirely neglected? Certainly, the moral sciences, in the plan of general and higher education, must have the supremacy, as their study embraces a knowledge of man, the laws of his being, his origin and destiny, incalculates upon his mind the unchanging truths of the unwritten laws which are anterior to all civil codes, being promulgated by the Almighty and engraven upon the heart of every man born into the world. A knowledge of these sciences schools the mind in first principles, in essential truths, in the laws of reason, and gives to it that most superior, that highest order of intelligence, that breadth and grasp of understanding so necessary to the true comprehension of all social, political and civil questions. For are not the fundamental principles of government founded upon God's immutable laws, upon the unchanging truths of religion—natural and revealed?

Yes, gentlemen, and the nearer that a system of government is fashioned upon moral principles—the jus gentium—the natural laws, the closer does it approximate to the beau ideal of perfect legislation, and the higher plane has it reached in the grand scheme of human progress. Again, it is from the fruitful source of the moral sciences that the poet, the orator, the journalist, the statesman and the judiciary, the men in whose hands are placed the destinies of society and nations, receive those lessons of truth and wisdom, that knowledge of the passions and affections of the human heart, so essential to the true culture of all, and without which no man can lay claims to ripe and profound scholarship. With his mind enriched by the moral sciences, the poet, who possesses the highest endowment bestowed on man—the creative power—can instruct as well as delight mankind; the orator, whose mission is to destroy error and injustice, and employ his gifts in behalf of truth and equity, can arouse generous passions, persuade the will and convince the reason in favor of a noble or just cause; the journalist is well qualified to discuss those questions of politics and sociology upon which he is daily called to pass judgment, to influence and form public opinion; the statesman has a profound conception of the sacred and inviolable rights of man, and knows the laws which should be erased from the statute-book and those that should be enacted the better to secure peace, order and liberty to society; the justice, who should resemble, as near as mortal man is permitted to resemble, the Judge of judges, is thoroughly competent to discharge the grave and responsible duty of meting out justice, unbiased and impartial. Religion is to education what the soul is to the body, what justice, patriotism and liberty are to a government—its controlling, living and saving principle. As the magnifying power of the telescope aids the astronomer in discovering new worlds measuring the distances of the planets, and demonstrating the laws that govern them, so the human intellect, when aided and directed by religion, has its capacities and powers inexpressibly strengthened and enlarged to penetrate into new fields of inquiry, to attain knowledge of the moral world which is as limitless as the universe.

The St. Joseph Valley.
—BY CALLEEN.

There's not in this wide world a valley more sweet,
Not even "Avoca," where bright waters meet,
And mingle their music beneath the soft smile
Of shamrock and daisy on Erin's green isle,
Where poets and bards have chanted the song
Till over the ocean its echoes prolong
In musical numbers, but 'tis not more blest
Than our lovely valley that sleeps in the west.

'Tis some fifty years since the good father came
From whom this bright valley deriveth its name,
On his mission of love, the Gospel to preach,
And untutored minds of the red men to teach.
His feet were the first of the white race to tread
This vale in wild grandeur and beauty outspread—
By our sparkling river his prayers arose,
And peacefully now here his ashes repose.

But wonderful changes since then have occurred,
Where the bowl of the wolf and panther were heard,
New sounds have awakened, new sights meet the gaze—
Which would, were he living, the red man arouse.
Where once stood his cabin and wigwam of old
Which would, were he living, the red man arouse.
New sounds have awakened, new sights meet the gaze—
Which would, were he living, the red man arouse.
Where once stood his cabin and wigwam of old
Which would, were he living, the red man arouse.
New sounds have awakened, new sights meet the gaze—
Which would, were he living, the red man arouse.

It is not that nature has lent to the scene
Her choicest of treasures and smiles so serene
That makes this bright Eden to me seem so dear,
But 'tis that the home of my childhood is near.
It was here I received the sweet lesson of truth,
From a dear mother's lips, in the days of my youth.
The deep-trodden pathway, each rock, hill and tree,
As mementos of childhood near;
Oh, the last ray of feeling and life must depart.
Ere the love for this valley shall fade from my heart.

Religion the Basis of True Education

We have not space to reproduce the entire oration of Mr. J. J. Fitzgibbon, which was delivered before the Alumni last Commencement Day. The following extract will show not only the spirit of the oration, but also the able manner in which Mr. Fitzgibbon treated the subject:

"But let us test the theory of secular education by the laws of reason and philosophy. There are three elements in the nature of man—his moral, intellectual, and physical powers. His moral nature, embracing the sovereign faculties of the soul—reason, free will, conscience, the unyielding aspiration for immortality, should not be allowed to remain in darkness, but should be developed to its fullest capacities, and illumined by God's religion and laws. The drawing out, the training, the disciplining of the physical and intellectual qualities of man, is at best but a partial education, and nar-
Some philosophers whose names are now in the mouths of men as leaders of modern thought, would turn the human mind wholly to the study of the inferior world, to investigate the laws that govern it, and discover by experiment and induction the causes that produce the phenomena and regulate the forces of nature. The great purpose of life, they say, is to master the physical nature of the world, unfold its secrets and utilize its elements for the benefit and material prosperity of the race. They would chain the soul to the earth, and confine all its longings, its aspirations and its hopes, to the pleasures, the enjoyments and luxuries, which the treasures of the world afford. But neither the undisputed possession of all that our mother-earth yields, nor the knowledge of the material world, can satisfy the cravings of the human heart, nor appease the undefined longings of the immortal soul. As the sun, in the planetary system, is the central focus which regulates and controls the unchanging course of the other heavenly bodies in their revolutions through space; so religion, which is the centre in the sphere of truth, is that great luminous body which assists and guides the human intellect to understand and comprehend all knowledge, all science, without wounding out of its orbit into darkness and error. Rudimentary and philosophical education, like the portrait, the features, the lineaments, the soul of which has not been transferred to the canvas, but the mere outlines sketched, is, therefore, necessarily incomplete without its fundamental principle, which is religious culture.

Jobbery in School Books.

Several of the Western States are giving us the advantage of important and valuable experiments in legislation. The experience of Illinois in dealing with the questions of minority representation and the railroad tariffs cannot fail to be of benefit to other States, however it may result at home. The equally important question of the common schools is just now receiving great attention in Indiana. Among other provisions of the law providing for a complete reorganization of the educational system of the State, it is ordered that no text-book adopted by a County Board shall be changed within three years from the date of such adoption, except by unanimous consent of the members of such Board. The fact that such a provision seems necessary indicates clearly enough the extent to which the County Boards of Indiana; and a member of a Board never goes to the post-office without a cart to bring back his correspondence with publishers. When we regard the erudition and the judgment of the average county politician who fills the offices, we can have little difficulty in imagining what class of considerations would most strongly appeal to him in his vote on a question of adopting or retaining any particular line of text-books.

The provision we have quoted from the Indiana law is merely a tentative step, to see if some barrier cannot be opposed to this flood of petty and vexatious corruption. The improvement is a very little one, but it is in the right direction. If schools are compelled to use the same books for three years it will diminish during that time the opportunities of stealing, and at least give many of the books a chance to get worn out. Everything which is done to lessen the profit and perquisites of the Boards will of course relieve the pressure of the loaferish candidates, and help to that degree the character of the whole system. It is so far that a child must have a new book for every few months' progress in any particular study. The common rules of arithmetic are scattered through half a dozen volumes. A few years ago, four common-school readers were considered sufficient. Now, under the pretense that a scholar should not be allowed to become familiar with the text he is reading, the series is stretching out indefinitely. New studies are continually being added to the course. Branches only fitted for advanced classes are made ridiculously elementary for the youngest children, merely to increase the demand for school books. The smallest urchins are sent staggering off to their schools with more books than they can well carry, each containing a homeopathic dilution of a single idea. It would not be so bad if there were any permanence in the text-books adopted. There is after all very little difference in merit between the different grammars, geographies and arithmetics. But often before the dog's ears have proceeded half-way through the leaves of a book, the teachers, the committee-men and the publishers come to an understanding and an entirely new series is forced upon the school. Sometimes the same publisher launches a new batch from his shop, by means of his relations with the local authorities. Sometimes a new publisher supplants him with the board and clears the desks and satchels for his own wares. The trade has thus become enormously profitable, and the corruption of course increases correspondingly. The Sentinel, of Indianapolis, says that agents from fifteen houses are now "raiding" the County Boards of Indiana; and a member of a Board never goes to the post-office without a cart to bring back his correspondence with publishers. When we regard the erudition and the judgment of the average county politician who fills the offices, we can have little difficulty in imagining what class of considerations would most strongly appeal to him in his vote on a question of adopting or retaining any particular line of text-books.

Everything which is done to lessen the profit and perquisites of the Boards will of course relieve the pressure of the loaferish candidates, and help to that degree the character of the whole system. It is so bad at present in many regions that any change can hardly be for the worse, and we hope that the Indiana experiment may be so successful as to encourage some similar action in other States.—New York Tribune.
DUCKS are scarce.
"Rain for the M'linds!
Are the Societies organized?
The grapes are fast disappearing.
We give the list of students this week.
All quiet and serene on the Croquet ground.
Wednesday the 10th inst. was a splendid day.
The slate roof on the Laundry building is finished.
The dust is a foot deep on the road to South Bend. More or less.
Both the Senior and Junior Departments are filling up rapidly.
The new brick house west of the old church has reached its second story.

BASEBALL is doing a good business in broken thumbs and disjointed fingers.

Mr. Shockey has invested in a new omnibus which will soon be ready for the road.

Rev. M. Maugé, of St. Vincent's, near Fort Wayne, made a visit to the College this week.

We have been shown some beautiful models of stained glass windows for the new church.

Father Spellard went to Lafayette last Monday, to be present at the marriage of Prof. Tong and Miss Ball.

Many items of interest have to be omitted this week, on account of the list of Students which, according to custom, we publish in the Scholastic.

The diminutive Bucephalus from St. Joseph's Farm makes the fastest time of any equine around about. The ponies look on his fast ways with disgust and disapprobation.

Our thanks to Rev. Father Corby for invitation to the laying of the cornerstone of the new church. We hope the Rock of Cashel may bring cash all-sufficient to finish the edifice from the foundation to the top of the steeple.

We hope Mr. may soon be able to tear himself away from the beautiful valley of the Hock Hocking, and betake himself to the smooth and silvery lakes of Notre Dame. We hear nothing of the boats on the lake since he left.

We have not yet heard the Band, but we feel perfectly at ease our mind is devoid of all anxiety on the subject, as we have been assured by the efficient leader, J. H. Gillespie, that he has some first-class players to begin the year with.

Our attention has been called to the extraordinary neatness of the northern apartment in the house opposite the Post Office. We may perhaps enumerate it in debating terms sometime in the not distant future; but at present we do not feel able to do it full justice.

A cursory view of some splendid engravings of the old Cathedrals of England has given us a clearer idea of the magnificent specimens of architecture built by Catholic England, and now used by the By-Law Established Church than we ever had before;—indeed, looking at them in succession through the glass that makes them appear their natural size, one has a more complete conception of their number and grandeur than if one were to visit them singly, scattered all over England. We expect to have a more leisurely view of them, and in case we do we shall take notes.

It is health-provoking and invigorating to read about our much esteemed and well beloved confères, Collar, issuing forth, like Arthur or any other Knight of the Round Table, on the square, to grapple with the collar or anything else that might chance in his way. We agree with him in his rambling remarks on September, and we could exclaim with the poet: "O Eustace! remain steadfast and stationary and thou shalt find a staystaff in some Anastasia to help thee on in the crassus ways of life!"

As for details given, of which we confess we are fond, we merely press them and then preserve them in our columns, having no need to follow our colored brothers' plan of adding salt, as our correspondent always seasons them sufficiently with the Attic article—though he does live no higher than the third floor—and we would make a pretty pickle, indeed, were we to attempt to meddle with them.

We take the following from the Lafayette, Ind. Courier:

"The event of the gay world yesterday was the Tong-Ball wedding at St. Mary's. Professor Lucius G. Tong, of the Chair of Commercial Law in the University of Notre Dame, and Miss Bridget Ball, daughter of James Ball, Esq., were the high contracting parties. The attendants were Miss Maggie A. Ball, daughter of Owen Ball, Esq., Miss Maggie F. Ball, sister of the bride, with E. R. Wills and James F. Edwards, of South Bend, as groomsmen. Rev. Prof. Lucius G. Tong, of the Chair of Commercial Law in the University of Notre Dame, and Miss Maggie Coquilard and Miss Mattie Shirland, of St. Joseph County, and Rev. Father Walter, of Crawfordsville, were among the invited guests. St. Mary's was crowded long before the arrival of the bridal party. The church was brilliantly lighted. The fair bride has been for several years the leading soprano of the choir, and in compliment to her the choicest of her performances were selected for the occasion. After the prelude, the Magnificat was sung, followed by the Gaude Virgo in the best of style. The choir is composed of Mrs. S. M. Ball (prima donna), Mrs. Thomas Ball, Miss Campbell, Miss Ahern, Mr. John Ball, Mr. Rodgers and Professor Moore.

"The Benediction followed, accompanied by the music of the Salutaris and Tantum Ergo. Dr. Hallinan delivered a brief, but impressive address, setting forth the inviolable sacredness of the marriage sacrament and the uncompromising hostility of the Catholic Church to the loose and demoralizing system of divorce. The marriage ceremony was very impressive. After the wedding came an elegant entertainment at the residence of the bride's parents. The wedding presents were numerous and costly. The music and dancing were continued until after midnight, when the bridal party took their departure for an extended wedding tour. May they be very happy."

In the Memoirs of Baron Stockmar, by his son, a description is given of the Royal Household of Queen Victoria. The way of How-not-to-do-it, which we have remarked in some households on this side of the Atlantic, is brought to a state of perfection in the Royal Household, which elicits our profound admiration. If a pane of glass, or the door of a cupboard in the scullery, unites the Bann, requires mending, it cannot be done without the following process: A requisition is prepared and signed by the chief cook, it is then countersigned by the clerk of the kitchen, then it is taken to be signed by the Master of the Household, thence it is taken to the Lord Chamberlain's Office, where it is authorized, and then laid before the Clerk of the Works under the Office of Woods and Forests; and consequently many a window and cupboard have remained broken for months.

SAINT MARY'S ACADEMY.

St. Mary's Academy, Sept. 10, 1873.

The present session opened under the most encouraging circumstances. The arrival of our venerable Father General and beloved Mother Angela (Superior), from Europe on the 31st, created such joyful excitement that even the new pupils seemed to forget their homesick feelings and catch the spirit of cheerfulness and joy that pervaded the house.

Mother Superior was accompanied from Europe by about thirty young ladies who have come to join the Institute, devoting themselves as Religious to the service of God and the instruction of youth. She also brought with her many gems of art, scientific apparatus, gold-leafed specimens, rich and rare books, and altar decorations, in fine a great collection of elegant articles with which to enhance the advantages and attractions of St. Mary's, and increase in its pupils a pure and refined taste for the aesthetic. Among the articles for the School of Design are choice engravings and photographs from the best masters, particularly in Christian art. Also exquisite models of illuminations, point lace and ecclesiastical designs. In a few weeks there will be forwarded to St. Mary's, from Paris, life-size marble statues of Our Lady of Lourdes, Mater Admirabilis, and St. Cecilia—also plaster casts of the masterpieces from choice statuary in the Gallery of the Louvre by Fra Angelica, Perugino and Raphael. Mother Superior has visited the most excellent Academies in England, Ireland and France, and culled from each whatever was calculated to improve the present programme of studies or advance the pupils of St. Mary's in the fine arts.

Classes commenced on the 2nd, and have continued regularly notwithstanding the constant arrivals of new pupils, for they drop into rank with such ease as to occasion no interruption. The list of pupils will be published next week. The number already exceeds 170, and many more are on the way, or detained for some weeks by different circumstances. The present session promises well in every
