I"Tis bitter to endure the wrong
Which evil tongues and hands commit;
The bold encroachments of the strong,
The shafts of calumny and wit,
The scornful bearing of the proud,
The sneers and laughter of the crowd.
And harder still it is to bear
The censure of the good and wise.
Who ignorant of what you are,
Or blinded by the slanderer's lies,
Look coldly on or pass you by
In silence, with averted eye.
But when the friends in whom you trust
As steadfast as the mountain rock
Fly, and are scattered like the dust
Before misfortune's rudest shock.
Nor love remains to cheer your fall,
This is more terrible than all.
Yet even this and these—aye, more,
Can be endured, and hope survive;
The noble spirit still may soar,
Although the body fail to thrive;
Sorrow and want may wear the frame.
Thank God! the soul is still the same.
Hold up your head, then, child of grief,
Nor longer to the tempest bend;
For soon or late must come relief—
The coldest, darkest life will end.
Within the heart, hope never dies;
Trust on! your day-star yet shall rise.
Conscious of purity and worth.
You may with calm assurance wait
The tardy recompense of earth!
And e'en should justice come too late
To soothe the spirit's homeward flight.
Still Heaven, at last, the wrong shall right.

On one occasion a poor woman applied to Pius IX when Cardinal Archbishop of Imola for alms, and her distress was so evident that he wished to relieve her; but he searched in vain for any money. Taking a silver dish from his table, he told her to pawn it at the Monte di Pieta, and obtain means to relieve her wants. "I can at any time redeem it," said the good Cardinal. His attendant soon missing the article, made search in vain, and came to report that it had been stolen; the Cardinal's confusion betrayed his secret, and his attendant knew by experience that the piece of plate had been sacrificed at the call of charity.

Thucydides, the famous historian of the Peloponnesian War, was born in the year before Christ four hundred and seventy-one, thirteen years after Herodotus and three years before Socrates. He was of a very noble and opulent family, but some of his biographers tell us that his ancestors were not of the "very first" rank. Others contradict this, since he was of the same stock as Miltiades. He was by birth an Athenian. It would be too long a process to trace his ancestors from those of Miltiades, for the proofs in support of this assertion are too strong to be doubted. Plu-tarch, in his life of Cimon, directly asserts it. A monument of the descendants of the Thracian kings was to be seen for a long time after his death in Cole at Athens, and among the many names inscribed on it is that of Olorus, which some historians averred to have been that of Thucyddides' father. Thucydides in the fourth book of his history calls it Olorus. Such was the family from which Thucyddides was descended. His pedigree might even be traced from the gods, since that of Miltiades is traced from Zeus. Cicero in his Orator says of him, "though he had never compiled a history, his name would still live, he was so honorable and noble." His education, no doubt, was such as might be expected from the splendor of his birth, the opulence of his family, and the good taste then prevailing in Athens, the most polished city that then existed or ever yet existed in the world.
It is impossible to give any direct account of his early education, since all that any have written concerning it is merely of a presumptive, though probable opinion. It is said that Anaxagoras was his preceptor in philosophy, since that philosopher was very great at that period.
Anaxagoras, the preceptor of Euripides, Pericles, and Socrates, is also said by Marcellinus to have been the preceptor of Thucydides. He also adds, quoting Antyllus as evidence, that "it was whispered abroad that Thucydides was atheistical, because he was so fond of the theories of Anaxagoras, who was generally reputed and styled an atheist." But we must remember that the Athenians were a very superstitious people; and the solution of an eclipse from natural causes, and investigating the course of nature, were to them sufficient proofs of atheism. He may have been very well versed in the philosophy of Anaxagoras, but his writings show him to have been no atheist, and without doubt no polytheist. By his manner of speaking of the predictions of oracles, it is plain he looked on them as equivocal, or rather insinuates them to be mere forgeries.
To show the singular bent of his genius and a remarkable prognostic of future eminence, the following story is told of him when in his fifteenth year. His father one day brought him to the Olympic games, and on that day Herodotus read his history to the great crowd of Greeks who were assembled to take part in the solemnity. Thucydides listened to him with the utmost attention, and after a short while he burst into tears. "Childish tears," some remarked; but they were tears such as few children would shed on such an occasion. Herodotus is said to have complimented Olorus on his having a son who had so great a passion for letters. In about two years after, he had to commence his martial exercises and the study of arms, to be able to share in the defence of his country; for every citizen of Athens was a soldier. At first they had only to serve within the Piraeus and the long walls; but as they advanced in years and skill they were compelled to join in the engagements of more distant lands. Of his career in foreign conflicts nothing is recorded; but we are sure that he made himself quite proficient in military tactics, since he qualified himself for the great trust of heading at one time the forces of the state. He is said to have been one of the party which was sent to found the colony at Thuris in Italy. The anonymous historian who relates this fact seems to have confounded Thucydides the historian with a statesman of the same name. The second was the son of Milesius, who being a leader in the oligarchical party at Athens, had the ostracism thrown upon him by the interest and popularity of Pericles, which is attributed to Thucydides the historian. His introduction to the history of the war shows him to have been at Athens for many years before it broke out, and not in Italy. He perceived the storm was gathering, and he well knew the jealousies of the states which composed the Spartan confederacy. He likewise knew the real strength of Athens, and knew all the measures which Pericles had recommended. He himself seems to have been alert for the eruption, ready with his lance to defend, and with his pen to perpetuate the memory to posterity. His own words, "hoping" and "conjecturing," seem to denote the great earnestness and attention with which he laid down his mind to the wide field of events about to be opened. He longed to become an historian, and now he saw a fine subject for his history. He set about immediately to take notes of all occurrences, to collect the materials, and was resolved to write the history of the Peloponnesian War before it had actually commenced. He was arrived, at the breaking out of the war, to the full vigor and ripeness of his years and understanding; and according to Mr. Dodwell, his chronologist, he was forty years old. We learn from himself that he was an eye-witness of the whole series of events; and that he was ever present at the transactions of one or the other of the contending parties. At first he watched those at Athens more particularly; but after his exile those of Peloponnesus. He speaks of Pericles as an eye-witness of his conduct, as one who heard him harangue in the assembly, urging the people not to weaken themselves by ill-judged concessions; that the war would surely be, and that they should gallantly exert that naval power which had made other nations tremble, and by which alone they could be saved. The war commences with vigor; the plague arises, and he himself tells us he felt its effects. Thucydides bore his part in the war, but he gives us very little account of his own doings, for no man of great abilities is less guilty of egotism than Thucydides, since he never mentions himself except when it is absolutely necessary. His patriotism was one of his most remarkable qualities, and whenever he had occasion to harangue his countrymen on that subject he would sum up his argument in these few lines of Homer:

". . . . . . His sword the brave man draws,
And asks no omen but his country's cause."

Brasidas, a Spartan, was at the head of the troops of the Peloponnesians in Thrace. He had made a forced march thither into Thessaly and Macedonia. By his fine deportment and persuasive address, joined to uncommon vigilance and activity, he carried all before him. He at length endeavored to take by storm the important city of Amphipolis, and very nearly succeeded in his undertaking. Thucydides, who was then in the Isle of Thasus, was immediately sent for, but ere he had arrived, Brasidas formed a negotiation with the Amphippolians and gained admission for his troops. Next the city of Eleon, situated a short distance from Amphipolis, was assaulted, but Thucydides had arrived just in time to have his troops stationed in the city; and Brasidas, seeing this, released. One would believe that Thucydides, who had acted so bravely on this occasion, should be thanked and rewarded instead of being reproached and punished, but the people of Athens thought he merited the last. For not arriving in time to save Amphipolis, Cleon, then a demagogue of the greatest influence at Athens, harangued the people so that Thucydidès was stripped of his command and condemned to exile. It is himself who tells us that "it was his recompense to suffer twenty years' exile for the affair of Amphipolis." Though wrongly treated, he scorned to become angry with his country. His temperament was in no way choleric or resentful. "Discharged from the public duties and avocations, he then betook himself to a solitude where he might qualify himself for handling down to posterity those affairs in which he himself was allowed to take no part. He was forty-eight years old, and entirely at leisure to attend to the grand point of his ambition, that of writing the history of the present war. A modern critic, speaking of him, says: "To judge of him from his history, and we have no other means by which to form an opinion of him, he must have been all judgment and no passion." He never murmured on account of his undeserved punishment. Great souls are congenial, and their thoughts are of a similar cast.

"Sweet are the uses of adversity,
Which, like the toad ugly and venomous,
Bears yet a precious gem in his head."

Plutarch calls exile one of the greatest blessings which the Muses can bestow on their favorites, since then they are free to serve their inspirations, and not when they are busied with the affairs of state or war. His exile lasted twenty-years. It commenced in the eighth year of the war, 423 B. C. In the year of his restoration from exile there was an amnesty at Athens, after the overthrow of the thirty tyrants by Thrasybulus. Thucydides was then at liberty to return to his native city, but whether he did so or not is uncertain. Twelve years after this event he breathed his last. He was continually during his last days employed in revising and giving a finishing touch to his history, but before he had time to polish the eighth book death came. After his death his works are said to have fallen into the hands of Xenophon, and he for the first made them public. A chasm exists in Grecian history from the time Thucydides stopped to the time Xenophon commenced. Xenophon is a sort of continuator of Thucydides, not in a style so lofty and majestic, but in a style sweeter and more popular. The place of his death and interment was most probably at Scaptesyle, in Thrace. Some say it was most probably at Athens, but this is shown not to be so, since at Athens there was a cenotaph erected to him among the Cimonians. All relating to his family is only conjectured, for we have no authentic vouchers, since neither he himself nor any of his contemporaries mention anything concerning it. To say anything in praise of his history is scarcely necessary, for nearly every one, whether he understands the Greek language or not, has read it, and must have formed his own opinion of it. The fame of his history has increased with its age, for Thucydides, in addition to his predecessors' powers of description, was a practical statesman, and was the possessor of great political wisdom. The work is written in the Attic dialect, and in a nervous, animated style. "The descriptions are very concise and vigorous, the sentiments truly noble, and the reflections interspersed through the narrative equally ingenious and judicious." His impartiality deserves the highest praise; but in his whole work there is to be found one fault, and that is in dividing its year into summers and winters and thereby paying more attention to unity of time than to unity of action. The greatest compliment ever paid to any historian was that which Demosthenes bestowed on the writer. The famous orator was so deeply impressed with the merits of Thucydides that he transcribed his works eight times, and so frequently had he read them that he knew the greater part by rote.

The Ancient Inhabitants of America.

All through the Mississippi valley, Mexico and Central America are found evidences that this country was once inhabited by a people who, far from being mere barbarians like the American Indians, were at least partially civilized, and had no little knowledge of the arts and sciences. In the Mississippi valley we find remains of their works, such as walls evidently enclosures for the defence of towns and cities, foundations for altars, temples, and places of worship. In Mexico we find the remains of what were once no doubt magnificent cities.

Now those mounds, pyramids, etc., in the Mississippi valley, and the ruins in Mexico, are so constructed as to prove conclusively that the builders of them had at least a primary knowledge of geometry, astronomy, and engineering. In those mounds have been found vases and many other articles, some of them neatly engraved, showing that they had some knowledge of the arts. Small bright tubes which partially serve the purpose of telescopes, leading us to suppose that they had a knowledge of astronomy, have been found. Pieces of cloth also remain, from which it may be inferred that the mound-builders understood its manufacture, and in the old trenches and ruins of Michigan have been discovered mining implements made of metal, and very well constructed.

That the ancient inhabitants of America had also a form of writing is proved by what is still found upon the remains of their ancient edifices in Mexico. This writing is of a symbolical character, and although some parts of it have been deciphered, it still awaits the coming of some person who shall succeed in giving to the world a translation of its full meaning. At least, whether this writing is ever deciphered or not, it remains a proof of the civilization of the ancient inhabitants of America.

It is quite absurd to suppose that the American Indians had any hand whatever in the construction of the remains above mentioned. In truth, they are as ignorant as we are concerning them.

With regard to the age of those relics of the aboriginal inhabitants it is generally accepted as a fact that they were built at least as far back as the commencement of the Christian era, and it is conjectured by some that they existed long before that period. Although the Indians must have been in the country four or five hundred years previous to its discovery by Columbus, yet they can tell us nothing of the builders of these mounds and ruins; they simply say that they have existed ever since their entrance into the country.

A great many of these mounds were, when the country first began to be occupied by the Europeans, covered with trees, which science enables us to decide were eight or nine hundred years old. There were also, at that time, in these forests the decayed remains of trees, showing that there had been still an older growth.

In the State of Michigan copper miners continually come in contact with old trenches and mines, from which, at some time long past, large quantities of copper have been taken. Growing over these are forests at least seven or eight hundred years old. These trenches and mines, therefore, have not been worked for eight or nine hundred years, and are so extensive, and such quantities of ore have been taken from them, that it must have required three or four hundred years to accomplish so much, and work them to such an extent.

In some of the mounds, which were evidently used as sepulchres, have been found the skeletons of men, which science enables us to determine, with some certainty, to be about two thousand years old.

In Mexico traces of this ancient nation or nations are everywhere found, but as we go either north or south they become less and less frequent, until they disappear entirely. Hence we are safe in supposing that Mexico was the centre and starting-point of ancient American civilization, and that as the population increased they spread out over the country, north and south of them.

There has been a great deal of visionary conjecturing and theorizing as to who these ancient Americans were, and where they came from, some holding that they were descendants of the "Lost Tribes of Israel," others bringing forward very plausible evidences that this country was in pre-historic times discovered and colonized by the Phoenicians. It is stated and confidently maintained by others that this country was discovered and settled by the Malays at a time far previous to the Christian era. Another, called the Atlantic theory, one which presents a great many probable and improbable explanations of the subject, is that there once existed a great peninsula extending from Mexico and Central America far across the Atlantic Ocean, filling up entirely the Gulf of Mexico, and either connecting or nearly connecting America and Africa. In this way the upholders of the Atlantic theory claim that America, far back in times hid in the darkness of the past, was peopled, and that afterwards this peninsula was destroyed by a great convulsion of the earth.

All these views of the subject are rather inclined to be visionary, and until they are proved by some conclusive evidence to be true, will not be generally accepted. The theory which at present is really the most practical, is that this country was peopled from Asia by way of the north-west passage.

A. B. C.
Public Speaking.

What is more disgusting than to listen to the speeches of those who rant or go through the subject with the rapidity of an express train that does not stop at the chief stations, or of those who bawl, stammer or hesitate? Yet of this class we have many; eloquent speakers are in a great minority. Yet, after all, the art of public speaking is by no means a difficult thing to be obtained. Eloquence emanates from a careful formation of the natural qualities. All men may not be eloquent speakers: but many in course of time, by self-exertion and culture, may become elegant orators, and all who have voice and common sense may be taught to set forth their views in eloquent and impressive language.

The first thing necessary in public speaking is that a person should have something to say, and the second is that he should say that something well. Therefore it is necessary to consider the matter of a speech, and the manner of its delivery. It is difficult to decide whether the debate or the set speech is the best for intellectual development. In the set speech there is no interruption to the current of ideas, and time is given for full consideration of and the bringing to aid all the appliances which the mind may suggest. On the other hand the very necessities of debate afford a vital energy which arouses the mind into activity, in order to maintain positions which our adversaries may perchance assault.

Now, the next thing necessary is the matter. In what you have to say, above all things let it be to the purpose. State your sentiments as simply as possible; a great assistance in this will be to lay hold of the subject at once. Let your exordium be in proportion to the quality, length and subject of your speech.

At an exhibition, nothing is so annoying as the tuning of the fiddles; so, whether in a speech or a debate, when the speaker spends a long time in tuning himself, as it were, the operation is very wearisome. In order to be clear, it is necessary to be clear. First, know what you want to be determined upon, and, starting with that, lay out your limits, and make your deduction gradually. Commerce with the weakest points, and then gradually ascend until you get to the strongest. When you know that you have struck a hard blow, do not repeat, but proceed with the next, and, above all, stop when you have done; that is, when you have said all you could about the subject, do not talk for talk's sake. Use the plainest and simplest language possible. Never let your words be loftier than your subject. If you employ words "of learned length and thundering sound," you will only be laughed at by sensible people.

—Twenty-two thousand children have joined the Pio Nono American Catholic Young Folks. Every member recites each day the prayer for our Holy Father. A gold medal is awarded to every organizer of a band of 100 and a silver medal to those of twenty.

—The term of "sick man" was originally used with reference to Turkey by the Emperor Nicholas, the predecessor of Alexander, the present monarch of Russia. In a conversation of Nicholas with the British Minister, Sir George Seymour, in 1854, the Emperor said: "We have on our hands a sick man, a very sick man. It will be a great misfortune, I tell you frankly, if the hero..."
Charalois, is introduced in extreme distress, sacrificing his own liberty to save his father's corpse from his exacting creditors and secure for it the common decencies of burial. He is rescued from his calamities, and his debts are paid by the noble and wealthy Rochefort, who crowns his favors by giving him his daughter in marriage. The infidelity of Beaumelle, the vengeance of her husband upon herself and her paramour, Norall, and the death of Charalois at the hands of Norall's friend, form the story of the play. Painful as is the story, the mode in which it is treated is characteristic of Massinger. There is no tampering with the bounds of right and wrong; none even of that gross and animal character about the heroine's fall, which we frequently find in plays of a similar character. The husband whom Beaumelle wrongs is not the husband of her choice, but a stranger imposed upon her by her father's will. The man for whom she sacrifices her honor is the man whom she had loved before her marriage. Her repentance is early and thorough, and her punishment severe. Nor is hers the only character in which similar principles may be traced; the moral lessons of the play are in all cases clear and true. The following lines from Charalois to his judges, when arraigned before them for the death of his wife and her paramour, afford a good example of Massinger's style:

"Thus I confess, my lords, that I stood bound,
When, with my friends, even hope itself had left me,
To this man's charity for my liberty.
Nor did his bounty end there, but began;
For, after my engagement, cherishing
The good he did, he made me master of
His only daughter and his whole estate—
Great ties of thankfulness I must acknowledge.
Could any one feed by you press this farther?
But yet consider, my most honored lords,
If to receive a favor make a servant,
And benefits are bonds to tie the taker
To the imperious will of him that gives,
There's none but slaves will receive courtesies,
Since they must fetter us to our dishonor.
Can it be called magnanimity in a prince
To pour down riches with a liberal hand
Upon a poor man's wants, if that must bind him
To play the soothing parasite to his vices?
Or any man, because he has saved my hand,
Presume my head and heart are at his service?
Or did I stand engaged to buy my freedom
(When my captivity was honorable)
By making myself here, and fame hereafter.
Then slaves to men's scorn and calumnious tongues?
Had his fair daughter's mind been like her features,
Or, for some little blemish, I had sought
For my content elsewhere, wasting on others
My body and her dower,
Determined truly, if that thankfulness,
Choice form, with the whole world given for a dowry.
Could strengthen so an honest man with patience,
As with a willing neck to undergo
The insupportable yoke of slave or wittol."

Of the death of his guilty rival he says:—

"For the last, as of
The former, I confess it; but with what
Base wrongs I was unwillingly drawn to it,
To my few words there are some other proofs
To witness thus for truth. When I was married—
For there I must begin—the slain Norall
Was to my wife, in way of French courtship,
A most devoted servant; but yet aimed at Nothing but means to quench his wanton heat,
His heart being never warmed by lawful fires,
As mine was, lords; and though on these presumptions,
Joined to the hate between his house and mine,
I might, with opportunity and ease,
Have found a way for my revenge; I did not.
But still he had the freedom as before,
When all was mine. And told that he abused it
With some unseemly license, by my friend—
My approved friend, Romont—I gave no credit
To the reporter, but reproved him for it,
As one uncuriously and malicious to him.
Yet what could I more, my lords? Yet after this,
He did continue in his first pursuit,
Hotter than ever, and at length obtained it.
But how it came to my most certain knowledge,
For the dignity of the court and mine own honor,
I dare not say."

We see here unquestionably the conceptions of a lofty genius; the stroke of a master's hand; the boldness and power of a man sensitive alike to the maintenance, at any cost, of his manhood and honor.

The "Virgin Martyr," however, demands our especial notice, not only because it is one of the plays by which Massinger is best known, but because it is entirely different in character from any of those written at the same period. The scene is laid at Coasarea, during the persecution of Diocletian against the Christians. The principal characters are the virgin martyr Dorotha, Theophilus the leader of the persecutors, and others connected on one side or other with the persecutors. But the real subject of the play is the conflict of good and evil, the triumph of good, not indeed in the world but over the world. The real leaders are Angelo, an angel passing as the page of Dorothea, and Harpax, a demon disguised as the servant of Theophilus. No doubt the play was a popular one, being both impressive and strange, and anything but in harmony with the whole tone of thought and feeling in England under James I. The whole would be truly revolting were we to lose the key-note, which is the victory of the Christian Faith through pain and death, and virtue receiving for its reward for suffering here, happiness in the next life. One of the companions of Theophilus is stunned at the fortitude of the little virgin.

"She ascends,
And every step raises her nearer to heaven!

Unmoved by Mars! as if she were assured
Death, looking on her constancy, would forget
The use of this inevitable hand."

Theophilus, seeing her intrepidity, is overcome for a moment with rage, and exclaims to the executioner:

"Derided too! Despatch I say!"

Dorothea rebukes Theophilus, who benefits by her bold admonition, and an angel having appeared to him bearing a basket of fruits and flowers from the gardens of Paradise, he becomes a convert at the close. Miracles are ordinary incidents of the play. Can there be anything more beautiful than the words of this little martyr:

"Thou fool!
Thou gloriest in having power to ravish
A trifle from me I am weary of.
What is this life to me? Not worth a thought.
Oh, if it be esteemed, 'tis that I lose it.
To win a better; even thy manly score
To toil but as a ladder to mount up
To such a height of happiness, where I shall Look down with scorn on thee and on the world!
Where, circled with true pleasure, placed above
The reach of death or time, 'twill be my glory
To think at what an easy price I bought it.
There's a perpetual spring eternal youth,
No joint-burning cold or scorching heat,
Faminor age, have any one being there.
Forget for shame your Tempé; bury in Oblivion your Paige Hesperian orchards:
The golden fruit, kept by the watchful dragon,
Which did require a Hercules to get it,
Compared with what plenty grows there,
Deserves not to be named. The Power I serve
Laughs at your happy Araby or the Elysian shades; for He hath made His bowers Better, indeed, than you can fancy yours.

Scientific Notes.

—Dr. Karl Sachs, who was sent out by the Humboldt Institution to study the electric eels at Calabaza, Venezuela, is now engaged in writing out the results of his investigations, in which will be included a description of the country and the people of Venezuela, and the author's experiences in travelling.

—Corsica sends annually from 350,000 to 400,000 black birds to France. These birds visit the island in vast numbers every winter to feed on the berries of the myrtle and arbutus, and become very fat by December, while their flesh acquires a delicious flavor and perfume as the result of their peculiar diet.

—The consignment of soles and turbot which left the Southport Aquarium Jan. 3 for the purpose of stocking American waters, about May next.

—The first telegraph-line in China has recently been established, between the Arsenal of Tien-Tain and the house of the Provincial Governor. The line is about ten kilometres in length, and the apparatus used are Morse's dialect elements, worked by Leclanche elements. A cable was required for the Philo River, which intersects the line.

—Interesting discoveries have recently been made in the underground rooms of a vast palace whose ruins exist at Mogobamba, South America, which suggests that the animal at different times, and represent it as nearly a metre in thickness, of diverse lengths, and with a snout like a sheep-hook. It is said to leave traces along its march, in the form of trenches about three metres broad, and that it even upturns trees in its progress. Nature suggests that the animal may be a relic of the colossal armadillos that in past geological ages were abundant in South Brazil.

—Some of the monasteries of Italy and France will send curious inventions to the Paris Exhibition. A Florentine friar has constructed a watch only a quarter of an inch in diameter. It has not only a third hand to mark the seconds, but a microscopic dial which indicates the days of the week and month, and the proper dates. It also contains an alarm, and on its front cover an ingeniously cut figure of St. Francis of Assisi. On the back cover two verses of the Te Deum are distinctly cut out. A monastery in Brittany, France, will contribute a plain-looking mahogany table, with an inlaid draught or chess board on the surface. The inventor sets the pieces for a game of chess, and sits alone at one side of the board. He plays cautiously and the opposite pieces move automatically and sometimes checkmate him. There is no mechanism apparent beneath the table-top, which seems to be a solid mahogany board.

Composers of orchestral music who have an ambition to sink or swim with other American folies at the Paris Exposition, will be interested to know that, owing to Mr. Jerome Hopkins's diplomacy, the restrictions first placed upon foreign works by the committee in charge have been removed, and such works are now to be performed by a local grand orchestra, instead of by imported bands. The lists were published in the 18th. Consul-General Torbern particularly requested that one of Mr. Hopkins's works be sent in.

The late George Cruikshank was, at the time of his death, engaged upon an autobiography which was to illustrate with designs of his own execution. The work had made considerable progress, and arrangements were completed for its publication. It is believed that it will appear shortly under the direction of his widow, Mrs. Eliza Cruikshank, who was the literary assistant of her husband before his death. The book will no doubt possess uncommon interest, as it will comprise recollections of literary men covering a period of about eighty years.

The Musica Sacra, Rivista Liturgica-Musicale per la restaurazione della Musica Sacra in Italia, which is published at Milan, has completed its first volume, and contains thirty-two pages of valuable and interesting letter-press, with about eighty pages of useful and interesting organ music. The editor began with organ music, rightly judging that the organists need instruction first. During the present year the musical supplement will be varied, organ music and vocal selections will be alternated. For those who understand Italian, the periodical will be a decided advantage, and for all Catholic organists and choir masters the musical collections are invaluable.

The Professors of the High School of Medicine for Ladies at St. Petersburg have petitioned the Minister of Public Instruction to grant the ladies who have completed their studies the same degrees as the men. They claim that the theoretical and practical study at the ladies' school is quite as extensive as that pursued by the men, and rather more so in the department of female diseases; also, that the monthly and yearly examinations prove that the ladies possess a very thorough knowledge of their subject; and that, moreover, in their service with the army in Roumania and Bulgaria, they gave abundant evidence of high capacity for acting as surgeons.

The 17th at Notre Dame.

The Feast of St. Patrick was of course celebrated at Notre Dame. It would never do to let it go by, and no Entertainment. Why, we would as soon expect to have the college building fall down on our heads as to let St. Patrick's Day go without an exhibition of talent in Washington Hall.

There was of course a large audience, for the weather was really beautiful. Long before the hour appointed a long row of buggies and carriages showed that a large number of visitors would be present; and come they did, until the hall was filled, all the benches and chairs having occupants.

The oration of Mr. M. Bannon was a worthy effort and was frequently interrupted with applause. The young gentleman is to be complimented on the beautiful composition, sound in thought and sentiment, and at the same time there is much praise to be awarded him on account of his delivery. There was no attempt at declamation, but yet everything was brought out in a manner deserving of the highest praise.

Mr. Congar declaimed "The Ride of Collins Graves," by J. Boyle O'Reilly. Mr. Congar has a very pleasing manner, and of course takes well. His declamation was a worthy effort. Mr. Cloggott followed Mr. Congar with a guitar solo which was well received and fully merited the encore given it by the audience. This was followed by the address of the Columbian Club, which was made by Mr. J. Fitzgerald. Good in sentiment and nicely read, it was well received by the audience. The prologue to the plays was then given by Mr. Theo. Fischel, and the curtain rose,—but not for the play. A comic act had been got up by a couple of young men and was put on the stage in first-rate style. It was after the manner of the old "Grecian Statues" which are frequently given by travelling troupes.

Indeed some of the statues were the same, but the majority of them were arranged by the young gentlemen who took part in the scene. Of course the act took, and an encore was the result. Every one says that it gave him a good laugh, and as that is what he attends Entertainments for he was glad to see it.

Then came the plays, the first of which was the "Country Attorney." This was successfully given, all of the young gentlemen acquitting themselves of their rôles excellently. Mr. P. J. Dougherty was "Pierce O'Hara," and assumed his character in a lively and taking manner. Mr. S. T. Spalding was the lawyer to a T. He looked the staid lawyer, and acted it to life. Mr. A. B. Congar took the part of "Hawk." He showed great skill, and his personage gives great promise for the future. Mr. Fischel (Saunders), took his part very well. Messrs. F. Luther (Maldon), B. Cloggott (Charlote), and J. Fitzgerald (Fielding), all gave a faithful rendering to their parts. The remainder of the actors, Messrs. E. P. McMullen, H. Murphy, R. Routledge, J. Cooney, G. Samson, J. Rogers, T. Barry, and T. F. O'Grady, all did well. The whole play was well liked, was applauded, and may be looked upon as having been very successful.

When "The Country Attorney" had had his say, Mr. P. J. Hagan declaimed "Shamus O'Brien" with great effect and was handsomely rewarded at the close by the audience by a round of applause. This declamation was followed by "The Irish Lion," a play which suffers considerably by cutting out the female characters; nevertheless it was presented very creditably. Mr. Jno. Lambin as "Tom Moore," the tailor, was very good. Mr. A. Keenan was an excellent "Squibbs," and Mr. George S. Walter was very affable as "Fitzig," and took his character with life and animation. Messrs. C. Nodler (Wadds), J. Shugrue (Capt. Dixon), T. Barry (Ginger), C. Devries (Puffy), and J. Rogers (John Long), took their parts well. "Mr. Echo," P. Hoffman; "Mr. Crummy," J. McConlogue; "Mr. Titter," A. Ginz; "McKenzie," J. J. Honeck; "Mr. Patridge," B. Cloggott; "Mr. Yawkins," J. Cooney; "Mr. Jenks," J. English; "Mr. Slim," S. T. Spalding; and "Mr. Shindy," L. Eisenman; were all well personated. Both plays were well given and well received, and served to make a fine Entertainment for St. Patrick's Day.

The closing remarks were made by Very Rev. President Corby. They were short and to the point. When these were over the large audience slowly left the hall, well pleased with the evening's Entertainment.

St. Mary's Academy, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Under the heading "Accomplishment of a Great Work by the Sisters of the Holy Cross," the Daily Tribune of Salt Lake City gives an interesting sketch of the educational work started there in the fall of 1875 by the Sisters of the Holy Cross, and which from the then very small beginning has gradually developed into its present proportions. The Tribune says:

"Of the 150 pupils now attending this school, only about twenty-five are of Catholic parentage. No boys are admitted to the institution except a few under twelve years of age, who are taught in a cottage adjacent to the main building. There are thirty-eight boarders in attendance at present, from Idaho, Nevada, and different parts of this Territory.

"The school is graded as far as practicable, but, as in the other schools, a perfect system of gradation is found to be almost impossible to adopt, since the great majority of the pupils attend for such short and irregular periods. The classes are divided into first, second and third junior, first and second intermediate, first and second junior, and minin. Instruction is made very thorough, and no student is graduated who has not passed a thoroughly satisfactory examination in all the higher as well as lower branches of learning. Special attention is given to vocal and instrumental music, which, though optional studies, and not necessary for graduation, are taught with great care by a thoroughly competent Sister. Plain and fancy sewing occupy a large share of attention; and painting in oil and water-colors is taught to those of the pupils who desire to take up the subject.

"The recitation and study rooms are capacious, and are well supplied with convenient desks and all the maps, charts and philosophical apparatus necessary to aid in the instruction of all pupils. The library connected with the institution is altogether too small. A large, carefully selected library is a necessary adjunct to every well-ordered institution of learning, and, financial resources permitting, the library should be at once enlarged so that all the standard works of reference could be consulted by the students.

"The school is not yet out of debt, but is rapidly gaining a sound financial footing, and within a short time it is expected to become firmly established as a self-sustaining institution. The efforts of Sister M. Augusta, Superior, and her co-laborers are worthy of every encouragement. They are certainly accomplishing a good work in the neglected cause of education in this Territory, as the behavior and advancement of the pupils sufficiently attest; and any aid that can be extended to further the interests of the institution by increasing the capacity of the building or enlarging the facilities for instruction, should be profited at once by those who feel progressively inclined."

Personal.

—James K. Murphy, of '70, is an officer on the U. S. S. Michigan.

—John J. Fitzgibbon, of '61, is a contributor to the Western Catholic.

—Ambrose Reid, of '72, is practicing law at Clarion, Clarion County, Pa.

—Charles J. Dodge, of '74, writes that he will be on hand as orator of the Alumni at the Commencement next June.

—Edward J. Sweeney, of '71, is with the Hon. James Sill, and will be admitted to the Erie Bar at May Term, at Erie, Pa.

—We are pleased to see Bro. Philip back again from Lafayette. At the same time we regret to see that his health is poor.

Local Items.

—Vegetation is now pretty well advancing.

—Signor Gregorii has nearly finished the painting in the new church.

—The horticulturists are engaged in pruning the trees in the orchard.

—You may now step in and take a look at the new engine in our press-room.

—Some carpenters are putting up a new fence at the north side of the Community grave-yard.

—There was a fine large audience at the Columbians' Entertainment at the beginning of the week. As soon as these shall have been selected their crews except thecoxswains. As soon as these shall have been selected we will publish the names of the crews. As navigation opened up early this year, the crews will have plenty of time for training before the June race.

—The pilots of the Manual Labor School will give an Exhibition the week after Easter. It will be strictly private; no one not connected with Notre Dame will be allowed to attend. We are sorry for those in the neighborhood, as they will no doubt lose plenty of fun.

—The Captains of the Boat Club have selected their crews except the coxswains. As soon as these shall have been selected we will publish the names of the crews. As navigation opened up early this year, the crews will have plenty of time for training before the June race.

—A most interesting game of baseball took place on the 17th instant between the Actives and the Atlantics. The former were victorious by a score of 32 to 17. The chief features of the game were a fine catch by Welty of the Actives and some fine plays by Deegan of the Atlantics.

—The 25th of this month is a holyday of obligation, being the Feast of the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin. The Mass sung will be Missa Regia. The Vespers are from the Common of the B. V. M.

—Messrs. Hoock and McCallen deserve great praise as announcers of the Columbian Debating Club; and Messrs. McHugh and Schmidt for their artistic skill in ornamenting Washington Hall for the late Entertainment.

—The grounds just in the neighborhood of the Scholastic office were cut up terrifically at the beginning of the week by trench-diggers who were engaged in arranging the steam-pipes running from the steam-house to the printing-office.

—Mr. O'Hara and Bro. Sebastian are making preparations for planting their tobacco crop for this year. They are the heaviest planters of this staple in the neighborhood, and we trust there will be nothing to spoil their great expectations.

—The Grecian Statues at the Columbian Entertainment were immense. Of course it put the members of the Club to a very great expense to get Delahunty and Hengler to come, but then they were determined to give the audience the very best of the kind.

—Mr. A. M. Kirsch delivered a most entertaining lecture, in Phelan Hall, on Thursday, the 21st. His subject was "Man and his Origin," and was treated in a masterly manner. Next week we will give a synopsis of the lecture, which we are unable to do this week.

—The Columbian invitations and programmes for the St. Patrick's Day Entertainment were printed on beautiful green tinted paper.

—The boats belonging to the Boat Club have been overhauled and put in good order. Boating will now be one of the regular pastimes.

—The Boston Pilot, Catholic Universe, and many other papers, contain lengthy reports of the Emmet Centenary celebration at Notre Dame.

—Bro. Paul is under obligation to a kind friend in La Salle, Ill, for one of the neatest and prettiest badges to be seen here on St. Patrick's Day.

—The Philosophers' Baseball Club played a match game with the Commercials on the 16th, in which the latter were beaten 10. They played for a ball.

—Bro. Simon, Prof. Howard, Prof. Edwards, and ourselves received a vote of thanks from the Columbians for services at the last Entertainment.

—The pupils of the Manual Labor School celebrated St. Patrick's Day on the 30th, the same day on which the Mass of St. Patrick was read. They enjoyed themselves greatly.

—Rev. Father Kelly preached an eloquent sermon at Lowel on the 17th. Rev. Father O'Mahony lectured at St. Patrick's, South Bend, to a large congregation the same evening.

—The recitation and study rooms are capacious, and are well supplied with convenient desks and all the maps, charts and philosophical apparatus necessary to aid in the instruction of all pupils.

—The library connected with the institution is altogether too small. A large, carefully selected library is a necessary adjunct to every well-ordered institution of learning, and, financial resources permitting, the library should be at once enlarged so that all the standard works of reference could be consulted by the students.

—The school is not yet out of debt, but is rapidly gaining a sound financial footing, and within a short time it is expected to become firmly established as a self-sustaining institution. The efforts of Sister M. Augusta, Superior, and her co-laborers are worthy of every encouragement. They are certainly accomplishing a good work in the neglected cause of education in this Territory, as the behavior and advancement of the pupils sufficiently attest; and any aid that can be extended to further the interests of the institution by increasing the capacity of the building or enlarging the facilities for instruction, should be profited at once by those who feel progressively inclined."

—The Mass sung to-morrow will be Missa Pueri Iuxurum. Vespers are from the Common of the Blessed Virgin.

—On Monday night a salute from the cannon was fired from the bank of the upper lake in honor of St. Patrick.
Requiem Mass was sung, at which the two Confraternities assisted. This was on the occasion of the month's mind of Pius IX.

—On the 17th Solemn High Mass was sung, and though the Mass was not that of St. Patrick, yet the solemnity of the day was the other. The sermon of Rev. G. H. Kelly was as we have said elsewhere, an excellent effort, one worthy the preacher and the occasion. After the High Mass, the students were delighted to see that the good steward had served up an abundance of turkey, which was partaken of with a relish.

—The regular weekly meeting of the Sodality of the Blessed Virgin Mary was held March 20th, at 7 o'clock p. m. Master D. Clune read a "Sketch of the Life of St. Aloysius." P. A. Donahoe read an essay on "The Rosary," and J. Fenton "What is an Indulgence." The ten-minutes' sermon was given by Rev. Father Corby, C. S. C. After the usual hymn the meeting adjourned. The Sodality is in a prosperous condition.

—The inevitable baseball nine held a meeting on the 16th, at which the following officers were elected: Bro. Theobald, Manager; P. J. Dougherty, Pitcher; T. Fischel, Catcher; F. Ewing, 1st Base; J. Roletter, 2d Base; F. Hoffman, 3d Base; A. B. Congar, R. Field; E. Ward, Centre-Field; A. Rietz, Short Stop; F. B. Barrett, Back Stop; A. J. Hettinger and S. Spalding, Substitutes. Doctors O'Grady and Johnson were appointed surgeons.

—At a meeting of the Eclectic Baseball Club held Thursday, March 21st, the following officers were elected for the session: Bro. C. S. Hagan, President; J. A. Burger, S. S.; K. Reynolds, 1st Base; J. Healy, 2d Base; A. B. Congar, 3d Base; A. Lumley, Short Stop; P. J. Dougherty, Catcher; F. Cavanaugh, R. Field; E. Dempsey, Left Field; F. Barry, Centre-Field; G. Cassidy, Right Field; C. Cavanagh, substitute. The meeting adjourned.

—Mr. Tello and Mr. Kelly will promise to attend our banquet on the Feast of St. Francis de Sales, next year, we hope. We shall guarantee turkey and all the celeros sufficient in advance for them, besides keeping in reserve a wing for ourselves. —Notre Dame Scholastic.

Active and well, and within reach that day, we accept; and when and at what period the student's education should be studied. Biology, he said, is a practical science; books, lectures, without practical experiment, do not make a biologist; but patient, careful, and constant experiment, joined to a diligent study, and attentive reading of scientific works, is the only method to adopt in order to become a theoretical student and an especially true of Biology and the study of the natural sciences. These sciences treat of life; but life is active, and as such exhibits many and various phenomena. A superficial theoretical knowledge of these sciences, such as is derived from the mere study of books, will be of no more practical utility to the scientific student than music is to him who knows the theory thereof but could not correctly execute the scale in C major. The lecturer then adverted to the fact that as every age, every generation, cultivates a special field of thought, whether literary, philosophical or theological, so in these modern times scientific research, scientific questions agitate the world.

Roll of Honor.

SENIOR DEPARTMENT.

JUNIOR DEPARTMENT.

MINIM DEPARTMENT.

Saint Mary's Academy.

—Mother Superior has been absent for the past week—returned on Saturday evening.

—Active preparations are in progress for the celebration of the Feast of the great St. Joseph.

—The Feast of St. Patrick was the twenty-eighth anniversary of the ordination of Rev. Father R. Shorts, O. S. C., Chaplain of St. Mary's.

—The prize article in the last No. of Rosa Mystica was "The Gems in Woman's Diadem," contributed by Miss Ellen Ewing, of the First Senior Class.

—A spirited and very interesting competition in Bible History took place on Monday morning in the Junior Preparatory Class. Laura French, Mary Lyons and Ellen Hackett deserve particular mention for their prompt and intelligent questions and answers.

—At Composition in the Third Senior Class on Friday morning, a little prize was offered for the best composition on the theme "Learn to think well, and you will learn to live well." Many good ones were written, but the prize was awarded to Miss Ellen Galen; Miss Genevieve Winston's Composition being second in merit, but nevertheless a finely written theme.

—The third number of Rosa Mystica volume the fifth, was read in the study-hall on Sunday evening. The editorials were: Misses Gaynor, Cooney, O'Neill, Henneberry, and Reynolds.

—Father Perrone, the illustrious theologian and the glorious champion of the dogmas of the Church, especially of the Immaculate Conception, for the last few years of his life was unable to say Mass; but he might have been seen every morning in the little Church of St. Andre al Quirinale, saying his Masses with all the simplicity of a child. He would remain there all day long, did not the Brother charged to take care of him come and lead him home to take his breakfast.

To make a home-made telephone take a wooden tooth-powder box, make a hole about 1/2 inch in the lid and the bottom. Take a disk of tinned iron, such as can be had from a preserved meat tin, and place it on the outside of the bottom of the box, and fix the cover on the other side of it. Then take a small bar magnet, place on it one end a small cotton or silk reel, and round the reel wind some iron wire, leaving the ends loose. Fix one end of the magnet near, as near as possible without touching, to the tin disk, and the other end of the wire. When this is complete a similar arrangement is needed for the other end. The two are connected by a wire. Prof. Barrett says that with this he has been able to converse at a distance of about 100 yards.
