"How to Choose a Husband."

(Extract from a letter from a young ladies' academy in Minnesota.)

"Father Cullen, President of St. Thomas, was giving us a lecture on Matrimony the other day and paid a fine tribute to Notre Dame men. He said the first the hockey team was, 'Where can we receive Holy Communion?' He said that the Notre Dame men are real men, the kind we ought to marry.

Note. — Unfortunately, our contributor has omitted the name of the academy.

What Impression Do You Make?

Do you like to make a hit? Human vanity generally does. Loyalty demands that you make a good impression not for yourself but for what you represent. People judge Notre Dame by your actions. Once you set foot on the hallowed soil of Notre Dame, you cease to be an individual; people judge you as a Notre Dame man — a Knight of the Blessed Virgin. What virtues did true knights practice? Find out, and cultivate them. The hockey team shows you what you can do.

How Far Your Influence Spreads.

A priest in California writes: "I don't know what you do to the boys there, but every Notre Dame man I have met has been wonderfully devoted to the Blessed Sacrament."

One Kind of Loyalty.

A Notre Dame man who is not devoted to the Blessed Sacrament should practice the negative loyalty of the Irishman who denied the Faith. (You may have heard the story, but some of the Walsh Hallers haven't.)

An Irishman came to confession in a foreign port and told the priest that he had denied the Faith. "You didn't do anything of the kind," said the priest. "Tell me about it."

"Well you see, Father, it was this way: I'm a sea-farin' man. I follow the sea. An' the last port I put in I took what must have been too much, because I got drunk. As I was comin' up the gangplank my foot slipped an' I sprawled all over the deck.

"There was some people standin' there, and one of 'em says: 'Look at that drunken Irish Catholic.' I up an' at 'em in a minute. I shook me fist in his face an' said: 'You're a damn liar. I'm a Methodist preacher!"

St. Patrick.

Polish, Bohemian, or South American, students who wish to pray for peace in Ireland should start the novena tomorrow. The Bulletin for March 18, 1922 had this to say: "Seventy per cent of the students were of Irish extraction."

Prayers.

Four students ask prayers for relatives who are sick and one for an urgent special intention.
