The Spirit of Notre Dame.

The "Spirit of Notre Dame" - you feel it in a handshake . . .

You hear it in the boisterous humor through the halls . . .

It's the din of the dining room - the clatter of the 'caf' . . .

It's the sanctity of the Grotto - the silhouette of a boy kneeling alone in a chapel in the glow of the vigil light. . .

You see it glistening on the Dome every time you catch that first breath-taking glimpse. . .

It surrounds you in the empty stadium as you sit alone in awed retrospect to the accompaniment of the band practicing in the distance . . .

It's the Hike Song!

It's the thrill in your throat when you hear the Victory March!

"Clashmore Mike" carries it over the hurdles.

Through the night, it keeps watch over the campus as the last light goes out and the last-minute men cross the deadline.

It smiles down over and over again at those famous last words: " - but, Father, I was only a minute late!"

The upturned, eager faces of the students at rallies. That's it! It's the "fellas" themselves! The "kids" - in Cavanaugh, Carroll, Sorin, Dillon, Brownson, too, and Walsh - sharp like their predecessors whose lingo, laughs, gripes and glory they carry on!

It's a boy like Bertelli! Angelo Bertelli, from West Springfield, Mass., standing there in the stadium ready for practice, perfectly at ease, even though being interviewed by a girl, of all people, while his grinning teammates call over: "don't swallow that plug, Bert" - a wad of licorice which he deftly shifts to one side for a picture.

... Bertelli, the perfect passer, lauding his team, the receivers, the line, making his own part sound so incidental: "All I need is a receiver like Murphy, or Livingstone, or Dove - when I find one of those fellows in the clear, I don't have to worry. And the line! Boy, with that kind of protection I can't miss. They give me plenty of time to find a receiver and, well, that's all there is to it."

But not a word about his own fame at Cathedral High of Springfield, Mass., where he captained the football, baseball and hockey teams.

His teammates will tell you about it, though. They'll tell you he was named one of the great hockey centers in New England. The "fellas" will tell you what a fine baseball player he is.

That's N.D. men for you... (Interview written for South Bend Tribune by Helen Park, formerly of South Bend and later a sports editor of the Philadelphia Record.)
